The church was well filled, with hardly standing room. The quartette rendered several patriotic songs, the recitations by Mrs. Dessie Grow and Arthur Davey were particularly praiseworthy. The Post was very fortunate in again securing the services of the Rev. W. G. Stephens as speaker, this being the second time this gentleman has delivered their memorial day address. The speaker held the large audience spell-bound from start to finish with a very able and patriotic address, which evidently came from the heart. The gentleman is a very forceful speaker and always commands the most wrapt attention, whether delivering an address or preaching a sermon. If there were any present that begrudge the old soldier a small pension they certainly ought to have been converted after listening to Mr. Stephens' address.

Lord, when beneath the trees we go,
Where all Thy sweet wild wood-folk
Glow,
The buds and boughs seem prayerful low,
Remember, Lord, and love us.
By every leaf that springs to birth
To share our plenty, bear our dearth,
Remember Thou wast born on earth;
Remember, Lord, and love us.
By every night, when skies are deep,
And solemn stars above us sweep,
Think on Thy nights of earthy sleep;
Remember, Lord, and love us.
By every dawning fresh and dear,
Where choiring birds sing round us clear,
Think on Thy mortal wakings here—
Remember, Lord, and love us.
By suns that shine with cruel stress,
By winds that vex us and oppress,
Remember Thine own weariness;
Remember, Lord, and love us.
By springtime days when joy is rife,
By winter nights of storm and strife,
Remember Thou hast lived earth's life,
Remember, Lord, and love us.
By all our slow decaying saith
Of doom drawn nearer with each breath,
Think how Thy life went down to death,
Remember, Lord, and love us.
So we have heard their prayer steal through
The morning sun, the evening dew—
Wilt Thou not hear us praying, too?
Remember, Lord, and love us.

"Where are you going, Sylvia?" said Mrs. Martin, as her daughter, accompanied by Mr. Amos Darling, a tall, elegantly dressed, young man, strolled out of the gate of the ranch house on to the open prairie.

"We are going for a little walk," was the reply.

"I want to speak to you before you go," said Mrs. Martin.

Sylvia returned a few steps to meet her mother.

"Sylvia," said the elder lady, "I see Tom Ruggles coming across the prairie. Don't leave the house."

"I saw him, too," replied Sylvia.

"That's why I am going."

"Sylvia."

"Yes, I am tired of seeing him hang around," and she rejoined her escort.

Mrs. Martin called after them, "Don't go too far, you know the cattle have been ugly lately."

"Very well," answered Sylvia without turning her head.

Mrs. Martin stood at the gate and watched their retreating forms till they passed over the swell of the prairie.

"Good evening, Mrs. Martin," said a hearty voice, and she turned to greet a handsome young man dressed in cowboy costume.

"Why, how do you do, Tom. Won't you come in?"

"Is Sylvia at home?" he asked as he swung from his saddle to the ground.

"She and Mr. Darling went for a walk a while ago. They will be back soon, I hope."

"Which way did they go?" asked he anxiously.

"Over the swell toward the slough," she answered. "But what is the matter?" for Tom sprang in to the saddle and his horse was already flying across the prairie.

Sylvia was the daughter of Major Martin, proprietor of the great Martin ranch, and Tom was the son of Colonel Ruggles of the great Ruggles ranch, a few miles distant. They had been friends from childhood and Sylvia thought there was no one like Tom until Mr. Darling appeared.

"Keep cool and we'll come out all right."

Mr. Amos Darling was from the east and he was looking for a location, he said. He thought he would like to engage in the cattle business. He brought letters to Major Martin from business friends in the east and was welcome at the ranch where he had made himself at home for several weeks.

Tom's fannel shirt, broad hat, and high heeled boots made a poor showing beside the neatly fitting attire of Mr. Darling, who in addition to being well dressed, could quote poetry and tell stories of European travel. So, in the language of the prairie, Tom "got the sack" when he called at the Martin ranch, and Darling was the "whole thing" with Sylvia.

Even if Tom was miserable, Sylvia was quite happy, and that September afternoon as she and Mr. Darling strolled across the prairie, she felt happier than usual, for her escort had shown a decided inclination to ask a certain question.

"What is that noise?" said Mr. Darling, breaking upon a recitation in which he was indulging.

They stopped.

"The cattle," gasped Sylvia. "Look." And coming toward them, a mile or more away, was a line of long horns stretching in each direction almost to the horizon.

Mr. Darling's knees shook. He had heard the stories of the viciousness of Texas cattle in a stampede and he realized their danger. He looked around. Not a tree or fence in sight.

"We are lost," said Sylvia. "We cannot get away."

"Let's run," quavered Mr. Darling.

"They would soon overtake us," sobbed Sylvia. "We cannot escape."

A shout ringing across the prairie from behind them caused them to turn. A horse urged to its greatest speed was coming down the swell toward them. "Tom," screamed Sylvia. "Come," and she ran to meet him, followed by her companion.

Tom reined in his horse and flung himself from the saddle.

"Quick," said he to Darling. "Up with you," and he helped him into the saddle. Then seeing Sylvia, he lifted her up behind her escort. "Ride for the ranch," he said, "and don't spare the horse. You'll be all right."

"What is that noise?"

"But you, Tom?" screamed Sylvia.

"Never mind me," was the reply, and giving the horse a cut with his whip he started the animal with his double burden bounding across the prairie. Only for a short distance, however, for Sylvia, reaching around her companion, seized the reins and bringing the horse almost to a standstill, alighted to the ground.

"I'll not leave Tom," she cried.

Mr. Darling hesitated for an instant, then loosening the reins, the horse tore across the prairie like mad.

Tom drew his revolver and took aim at his rival but he did not fire. After an instant's hesitation he returned his weapon to his belt and said to Sylvia, who had run up to him.

"Keep cool and we'll come clear."

Their position was a dangerous one but Tom knew his business. They were in a sort of valley between two vast swells of the prairie. At the bottom of this valley ran a "slough," a wide boggy strip of land showing occasional pools of water, but made up mainly of stiff, wiry mud, several feet deep, interspersed with tussocks of bunch grass. They were but twenty paces from this slough, and coming toward them on the other side of it was the vast drove of cattle thundering down the hill with a tread that shook the earth.

"Stand behind me," yelled Tom in Sylvia's ear as he took his stand facing the slough and the approaching herd. She obeyed him.

The first line of animals rushed into the slough. Of these but few succeeded in crossing. They sank to their bodies in the mud. Those behind, urged on by the weight of the herd, tumbled over them in every direction. Soon the slough was bridged by their sinking bodies and the first animal succeeded in getting across almost opposite Tom and Sylvia. Tom's pistol cracked and the animal rolled over, dead. Another and another till the six barrels of his revolver had piled up a barricade of six struggling steers in front of them. Five seconds fitted the empty cylinder with cartridges, and getting closer to the barricade, Tom continued his deadly work.

A dozen dead or dying steers were now piled up in front of them, and the herd, dividing at this point, passed by on either side.

Tom continued shooting at intervals and the gap in which they stood grew wider and wider. Finally the last steer passed by and disappeared over the swell and Tom turned to look at Sylvia.

"We are safe now," he said simply.

Sylvia had been very much frightened at first, but she was a prairie girl after all and was now as cool and collected as Tom.

They started to walk to the ranch.

"Say, Tom," said Sylvia, "how did you come to give up your horse to Mr. Darling? If you had just taken me on behind you, we could have escaped easily."

"He would have been killed," said Tom. "I thought you loved him and his death would have broken your heart."

"Love that dude. What can you take me for? You are worth a million of him."

"Sylvia," said Tom, "what made you jump off the horse?"

"Because," said Sylvia, "I preferred to die with you rather than live with anyone else."

Then the cowboys coming from the ranch to look for their dead bodies saw Tom take Sylvia in his arms and cover her face with kisses, in spite of the coasting of dust.

Mr. Darling did not remain to the wedding at the Martin ranch. He concluded that he would not like the cattle business.

DIAMONDS AT A DISCOUNT.

Gems Are Not the Only Requisite of Success on the Stage.

Once there was a merry villager in a solemn opera company who had aspiration to be a whole constellation all by herself. She watched the starry firmament very carefully and noticed that every star had plentiful collections of jewelry and so many diamond sunbursts that they got tanned wearin them. She forgot to remember that all the stars had written testimonials to patent medicines, and that the picture of one of them or another went with every bottle of tonic. She thought all were stars who glittered and straightway saved up her salary for ten years and soon had a bureau drawer full of kohlinoors. She then applied for a job on the strength of her gem museum. But the manager asked her if her pictures were all over the town recommending a new sort of nutritious puppy biscuit. Then she sadly replied that it was not. He replied: "You won't do. The diamonds are all right, but we can't put them on a billboard." Whereupon he blew cigarette smoke through his nose, which signified that the interview was over.

Moral: A bucket of paste on a billboard is worth two real diamonds in the top drawer of a Louis Selva chiffonier.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Gentlemen—"Although my school does not believe in patent medicines, I have found it to be a fact that Peruna is a grand and valuable medicine. I have known it to cure Mrs. Sampson, suffering with an inflamed womb, aggravated by malaria, after the doctors had failed to help her. Another of my former patients suffered with a complication of female diseases; she was so thin, nothing but skin and bones, but Peruna cured her and she is to-day in good health and good flesh. Facts prove that Peruna revives lost strength and restores to the sick that most wonderful blessing of life—health.

"I can speak only good words of the repeated benefits I have had from the use of Peruna."

"The constant application to my head last winter caused me to have swollen head and backache and dragging pains. I could not sleep any more, neither was I fit to go on. Receiving of the beneficial results from the use of Peruna I purchased a bottle and within a few days after using it, began to feel better. I constantly improved and before the seventh bottle was completely used, all pains were gone, my strength was restored, and I now seem ten years' younger."

"I suffered for over a year with general weakness and debility, especially in severe backache and headache. My physician prescribed different medicines, none of which seemed to help me any until a club associate advised me to try Peruna as it cured her of constitutional headache and stomach trouble. I at once ordered a bottle and before it was used, felt greatly improved. I have taken four bottles and for two months have been entirely free from these maladies. Several of my friends are using Peruna with beneficial results, especially in cases of troubles with the kidneys and other pelvic organs, together with weaknesses peculiar to women."

Dyspepsia

Most people eat more than is good for them. The stomach tries to digest all that's put into it, but if repeatedly overloaded, it goes on a strike. That's indigestion. Rich, over-sweet, indigestible food weakens the stomach and makes it unable to take care of the material put into it. More food taken into a weakened stomach than the stomach can digest, stays there, forms gases and rots, bringing on all the horrors of dyspepsia. The only way to cure dyspepsia is to clean out the digestive canal with CASCARETS. Keep it clean with Cascarets, eat light food sparingly, and give the stomach a chance to rest up and get strong again.

If girls had less of a smattering of high-sounding knowledge, and were better grounded in the practical lessons of living, it would be infinitely better for their future happiness.—June Ladies' Home Journal

It is a safe assertion to make that not one-third of the girls and women who wear aigrettes have the faintest conception of what they really are and at what cost they are secured—a cost which appeals with peculiar force and significance to every woman with the first instinct of maternity within her.—June Ladies' Home Journal.

Shrubs growing in a poor soil seldom produce bright, high-colored flowers. Generally the application of manure in liberal quantities will improve their color. Iron filings and scales collected about a blacksmith's anvil have a tendency to intensify the color of many plants, if dug into the soil about their roots.—June Ladies' Home Journal.

Indigestion.

So thoroughly are some people impressed with the idea that the hog is an omnivorous animal and able to eat anything with impunity, that they will scarcely believe that swine suffer from indigestion, yet such is the fact. Indigestion, especially of young pigs, is a very common complaint, and often a serious and even fatal one. The symptoms of the trouble are varied, but in pigs one of the commonest is vomiting and this is often accompanied by fits, staggering or thumps. Other symptoms are squealing and rubbing the nose in the mud; general thriftlessness, emaciation, constipation or diarrhea, skin diseases, such as hives, nettlerash, eczema and itchiness. Cough is also a common symptom of indigestion, but in our experience is usually found along with the indigestion caused by the presence of worms in the stomach or intestines. It is also usual to find the appetite of hogs suffering from indigestion depraved or peculiar in that they will prefer foreign bodies to good food, drink manure tea rather than pure water or slop and act strangely, sometimes hungry, sometimes having no appetite at all. When any of these symptoms are seen to affect the hogs it is time to commence a search for the cause, and this is usually to be found in erroneous methods of feeding or in the food supply. The bad effects of the sour swill barrel have been alluded to in a former article. The long continued feeding of any one food, such as corn, is a common cause of trouble of the digestive organs, and the same may be said of feeding too much of any food or combination of foods. In the first place it should be remembered that the stomach of the young pig requires a little food often more than it does a great amount of food at one time, so that when a pig is seen to vomit there may be nothing wrong with the food itself, but the amount given is too great and the time between feeds is too long. The first step on noticing that the pigs are suffering from indigestion is to cut down the amount of food and give it oftener and in it mix something which will make it digest better. A good medicine for this is lime water, and it may be very easily made by pouring water upon fresh lime and thereby slaking it. The water should then be diluted further and may be mixed with advantage in the food of the pigs. Charcoal is also valuable in the same way, and for this reason many are in the habit of feeding soft coal but there is no doubt that powdered wood-coal mixed with the food has a better effect. The soft coal has one advantage in that it contains sulphur, but this can be added several times a week if there is a tendency to constipation or skin disease. If a pig is found to be constipated, then the bowels should be moved by two tablespoonfuls of castor oil or an ounce or two of epsom salts, after which it is well to mix in the food twice daily one teaspoonful of hyposulphite of soda and a half teaspoonful of ground ginger root. For chronic vomiting we have found nothing better than nuxvomica in small doses mixed with the food. For a pig three grains three times daily of the powdered drug will do to start with, but it should be increased if necessary, and if the vomiting does not cease then add two or three drops of carbolic acid well mixed up in a little milk. For diarrhea the treatment would be a little different. The first thing is to clear the bowels by means of a dose of castor oil, then follow up with ten grain doses of subnitrate of bismuth and fifteen drops of tincture of opium or three grains of powdered opium three times daily in food. Where there is a lack of appetite the bowels should be moved freely, then follow with ten grains of powdered gentian root and a like amount of dried sulphate of iron twice daily in the food. A change of food is always indicated and if roots can be obtained they will usually give the best of results or the food may be boiled.
