THE STATE IN GENERAL

THE LOCATION OF THE STATE CAPITAL TO COME UP AGAIN.

DETROIT'S CLAIM FOR IT

Michigan-Banks Are All Right—Watered Stock Becomes Expensive to Holders.

The State Capital.

The ancient claim of Detroit that it is the legal capital of the state is to be passed upon by the constitutional convention, and organizations are already reported as forming in various sections of the state to remedy what Gov. Pingree called the "crime of 1847," when the state legislature moved the capitol from Detroit and ordered that it be located in the "township of Lansing," in the county of Ingham, at that time in the midst of a forest and 20 miles distant from any railroad.

In the convention of 1835 a clause was included which provided that the capitol should be located at Detroit until 1847, when the legislature should locate a permanent capital. There were many claimants, Grand Branch, in Genesee county; Byron, in Shiawassee county; Lyons, in Ionia county; Dexter, in Washtenaw county, besides such cities as Jackson, Ann Arbor, Marshall, Corunna, Eaton Rapids and Battle Creek. Finally the committee of the whole, which had risen several times in agreement, always to be rejected by the house, located the capital in the wilderness.

Since that time, at intervals, and especially since Gov. Pingree's message, there have been many attempts to pass an amendment through the legislature to return the capitol to Detroit.

Safe People in Asylums.

C. W. Mason, editor of the Northwest Farmer, published in Menominee, charges that heartless relatives who wish to become rid of infirm old people, send them to asylums on the pretext of insanity, and that the state asylums are full of instances of his charges. He says that there are at least fifty patients of this sort in the Newberry asylum.

In an editorial Mason directs his attacks not on the superintendents of the asylum, but on the public and the county officials, who permit the alleged conditions to exist either through ignorance or neglect of duty.

"It is for the humanity of the public to know to what extent this practice is carried on and to put a summary stop to it," he says. "It is for the authorities in each county to investigate conditions at home and to carefully scan each case of insanity to see that absolute justice is done.

Cowardly Hunters.

Floyd Osborn, a young man of Sherman township, was accidentally shot and perhaps disfigured for life by a hunter in the woods near his home. He received the entire charge in his face and chest, one shot going through his nose and others tearing his cheeks and shoulders. The hunters had startled a partridge and fired, and Osborn was in line of the charge. When the hunters heard Osborn's cry and saw him fall they fled into the thicket and disappeared. Osborn became unconscious, but recovered sufficiently to drag himself home. He thinks he recognized one of the hunters.

Watered Stock Held.

A jury in the circuit court decided in favor of the Athens Savings bank in the suit against the stockholders of the defunct Star Manufacturing Co. for $3,000, holding that the stockholders were liable for the unpaid 62.3 per cent, or "watered" stock of the company.

The suit was the first under the limited corporation law, and if upheld by the supreme court, will have a state wide influence. Hundreds of Michigan investors have lost their investments in stock companies, and if compelled to pay for the "watering," many will lose their entire fortunes.

A School Bank.

The school savings bank, which went into effect Friday in Ann Arbor, was a success from the start and at night the same day a total of $49.97 had been deposited by 227 pupils. The individual deposits ranged from one cent to $5.05. The deposits are made by the children of the fourth to eighth grades. The system used embodies many of the principles used in other schools, but has one distinctive feature, that of the accounting, which is carried on entirely in the commercial department of the high school under the direction of Prof. D. W. Springer.

Goes to Austria.

James O'Donnell, former congressman, Jackson editor, and mentioned frequently as Republican candidate for governor, has gone to Vienna, Austria, where he expects to make his permanent home. The family likes the Austrian city and, with the good-sized fortune O'Donnell has accumulated, will be able to live there in a comfortable fashion. O'Donnell says he will retain his American citizenship.

"I voted for Fremont in 1856, and have voted the Republican ticket ever since, but if I live another year I will vote the Democratic ticket." As he spoke these words, Samuel Smith, 75, pioneer farmer of Dewitt township, dropped dead.

The usual price for rabbits in Coldwater is 15 cents apiece or two for 25 cents. But Isaac Clair has just whacked up $30 for 17. Two weeks ago Mrs. Urban, hearing a commotion in her rabbit pen early one morning, hurried out and found Clair's dog surveying 17 dead rabbits. A jury assessed Clair $30.

NICE BOY.

Alice Marsh As a Grocer Boy Just Fell Right Into Her Work.

When "Victor Mars," a "boy" of about 16, applied to George H. Johnson, a Detroit grocer, he was struck with the pleasing personality of the applicant and immediately gave "him" work. Victor's first duty was to go to the stable, feed and hitch up the horse. The lad obeyed with great willingness, frequently washing his white hands and handling some things about the stable with a gingery air. The grocer became suspicious, and when Mrs. John Campbell, the lady of the house where "Victor" roomed, came and told how Victor was sleeping in a lady's night dress and wearing other articles of feminine apparel, the story of the disappearance of Alice Marsh, of Jackson, was cleared up.

When confronted with the facts, the little girl admitted to the landlady that she was not a "real boy," but that she was masquerading because she didn't want to stay home. She said her mother abused her. Being discovered, Alice hunted up a brother who lives in the city and is now at his home none the worse for her masquerade.

The Bancroft Murder.

Justice of the Peace Conrad Frye impaneled a jury and, after viewing the bodies of Arthur Rogers, the Bancroft farmer who cut his wife's throat and then his own during a fit of insanity, decided that the crime was committed by Rogers and that an inquest was not necessary. The house disclosed that a terrible struggle had taken place before Rogers succeeded in accomplishing the murder. Blood was spattered over several of the rooms, indicating that the wife had fled from him only to be caught again. After killing her Rogers went to the grindstone to sharpen the razor for cutting his own throat. Blood was found on the grindstone and on the path leading to it from the house.

Carrie Slaps Masons.

Carrie Nattie made an attack on the Masons before the National Purity Federation in Battle Creek. She said that Masons swore only to protect the wives, daughters and sisters of brother Masons, but went no further in their protection of womanhood.

"No man can keep his oath to his lodge and his country," she said, "for Masons help criminal Masons. Girls never marry a Mason. His Masonic oath prevents him from being a husband."

Postoffice Robbed.

Burglars broke into the Springfield postoffice about 3 o'clock Wednesday morning by picking the lock of the front door and exploded the safe with a charge of nitro-glycerine. The whole front of the building was blown out by the force of the explosion and the interior badly wrecked. The burglars obtained about $500 in stamps. Tracks about the building indicate that three men carried out the robbery.

New Postoffice.

Postmaster Prettyman received word from the treasury department in Washington Wednesday that an appropriation of $80,000 had been made for Ann Arbor's new postoffice. He was directed to advertise for bids with the stipulation that the successful bidder must complete the building by May 1, 1909. The structure will be 58x66 feet and will be located at the corner of Catharine and Main streets.

Insane over the death of his son, who was killed for his money in Norfolk, Va., a year ago, Rev. N. H. Dolson, a retired Cedarville clergyman, was sent to the Newberry asylum.

Of the $2,989,829 to be apportioned among the primary schools, Wayne county will receive $440,868. The apportionment is about $4 for each of the 747,091 school children in the state.

THE NOVEMBER ELECTIONS

TOM L. JOHNSON ELECTED MAYOR OF CLEVELAND FOR A FOURTH TERM.

RESULT IN OTHER STATES

Kentucky Elects Republican Governor—Anti-Graft Goes in California—Reports From All the Battle Grounds.

Johnson Has Cleveland.

Tom L. Johnson is again a winner, his plurality over Rep. Theodore Burton for mayor of Cleveland exceeding 9,000. Johnson says he will be a candidate for a fifth term two years hence and stick to his task of giving Cleveland three-cent street car fares. Complete returns give Johnson 48,339 votes, and Burton, 39,026. Johnson's exact plurality being 9,313. The entire Democratic ticket was elected with the exception of police clerk. The city council will stand 25 Democrats to 7 Republicans. It is reported that because of his victory Johnson may be William Jennings Bryan's candidate for the presidency next year.

Other Battles.

Kentucky has elected the entire Republican state ticket, headed by Augustus E. Wilson for governor, by majorities ranging from 5,000 to 10,000. The Kentucky legislature will have a Democratic majority on joint ballot and probably will elect Gov. Beckham to the United States senate. Louisville elected a Republican mayor.

Gov. Gullid, of Massachusetts, has increased his plurality to about 105,000, as against 30,000 in 1906. The entire state ticket and both branches of the legislature are Republican. Of the two Democratic candidates Henry M. Whitney strongly outran Charles W. Bartlett, the latter falling far below Thomas L. Hisgen, of the Independence League.

The San Francisco election proved a landslide for the anti-graft leaders, and the Good Government ticket has been overwhelmingly elected from top to bottom. Mayor Edward R. Taylor, Democrat, has a plurality of more than 11,000 votes, while District Attorney Wm. Langdon has so far a majority of 16,000 over McGowan.

The election in Greater New York resulted in a Democratic victory. New York county (Manhattan and The Bronx), went overwhelmingly their way, Thomas F. Foley, for sheriff, having a plurality of 26,723 over M. E. Ibsen, Independence League and Republican, in a comparatively light vote.

Late returns indicate the election of J. Franklin Fort (Rep.), governor of New Jersey by nearly 5,000. The state legislature will be Republican.

Rhode Island has re-elected Gov. James H. Higgins, Democrat, his plurality now reaching 2,307, a gain of 1,000 since 1904. The general assembly is Republican in both branches, ensuring the return of George Peabody Wetmore to the U. S. senate.

Maryland has elected Judge Austin L. Crothers (Dem.) for governor and the entire Democratic state ticket by about 7,000 plurality. Ex-Gov. Smith carried the primaries for the long term in the United States senate and Senator Wm. Plinckney Whyte is assured of the short term.

Practically without opposition, the Mississippi Democratic state ticket, with E. F. Noel for governor, was elected yesterday.

Through the election of John D. Bransford as mayor, the general city ticket and a majority of the city council, the American party retained complete control of Salt Lake City for two more years.

In Toledo Brand Whitlock was elected mayor on his Independent ticket, getting 6,000 plurality. He stands for three-cent street car fares. In Columbus, O., C. A. Bond (Rep.) was elected mayor by 5,000. In Cincinnati Col. Leopold Markheit (Rep.) won by 10,000 over Mayor Dempsey (Dem.) and Frank Pfaff (City ticket).

Pennsylvania elected John O. Sheets state treasurer by 150,000.

Virginia elected a Democratic state legislature. Nebraska is 20,000 Republican on the state ticket.

Delaware voted "dry" except in the city of Wilmington.

After Fishermen.

It has transpired that the gasoline yacht, Kitchell, supposed to have been bound to the gulf with a party of New Yorkers, has been in the commission of the state fish and game department on a trip of inspection of fishermen's nets. In order to keep the news from the fishermen it was announced that a rich New York man was taking some of his friends on a lakes-to-the-gulf trip.

Cattle Buyer Missing.

James Purdy, a well-known cattle buyer, who makes Standish his headquarters, is missing, and no trace of him can be found. Purdy left the "Boo" about a week ago in a rig and went into the country. The rig was returned without Purdy. He had a considerable sum of money with him when he disappeared and his family, who live in Columbusville, fear he may have been robbed and killed.

Mrs. Robert Burns, of Lansing, is dead from injuries received by the explosion of gasoline.

A company has been organized in Alpena to utilize the fine clay beds on the farm of ex-Sheriff W. T. Jones in Green township. It is probable that a plant will be erected near the beds to manufacture fine grained tile and brick, pottery, firebrick and clay products.

Frank Piaratz, of Detroit, who has been working in Johannesburg, started for home Saturday with about $100. He got as far as Bay City with three friends, and the last he remembers is of taking several drinks. When he awoke his money was missing. He complained to the police and they are looking for his "friends."

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1907.

Roosevelt Will Be Re-Elected.

Governor Warner returned to Lansing Tuesday from his eastern trip, and in an interview gave out that he was confident of Roosevelt's re-nomination and re-election.

"I think the president is perfectly sincere in what he has said," declared the governor, "but if the party goes right ahead and nominates him he cannot refuse, and everything goes to show that they will do just that. He is demanded by 75 to 90 per cent of the people and the conditions are such, and the situation is such, that the whole party and the whole people will turn to him. In Michigan 50,000 Democrats voted for Roosevelt in 1904, and this means that every local candidate will be for Roosevelt at the head of the ticket."

"The same condition exists all over in a greater or less degree. I cannot say too strongly that I believe our president is perfectly sincere in his declaration against a third term, but next spring when they all talk Roosevelt and work for Roosevelt and go to the convention for Roosevelt there can be no result but his re-nomination and re-election."

"A number of us took a little railroad trip out of Escanaba to visit a lumber camp. They took a straw vote on the president. There were 34 votes. Of these Roosevelt got 26, Taft 3, Hughes 2, Cannon 1 and Bryan 1. Roosevelt sentiment seems to overwhelm all other sentiment just like that."

Work of Attorney-General Bird.

Lansing, Mich., Nov. 2.—The attorney general of the state of Michigan, who receives the magnificent salary of $800 a year, collected for the state through his department, the sum of $6,032,802.36, during the fiscal year of 1906. Included in this sum was the railroad taxes, amounting to $5,975,799.43, collected in the ad valorem tax cases. For the support of insane in state asylums the sum of $12,755.08 was collected, and $7,410.07 in inheritance taxes.

In his report Atty.-Gen. Bird shows to quite an extent the large and ever increasing business of that department and the many important questions which the staff is called upon to decide and take a decided stand upon, aside from watching out to safeguard the interests of the state so well that the department's record is generally accepted as highly commendable in every way.

Woman's Literary Club.

The Woman's Literary Club held its third regular meeting Nov. 1st in the Club rooms with the President in the chair. There were 22 active and three associate members and one visitor present. MANDY'S EMANCIPATION.

Concluded from Eighth Page. er's son, whereupon young Gleason had drawn his whip from its socket, and his opponent, whose whip was not at hand, had snatched a billet of wood from the woodpile. Then, after a further exchange of hostilities, the young men had sprung into their respective vehicles and driven away at a furious rate in opposite directions.

Mr. and Mrs. Alger, witnessing the scene from the sitting room windows, felt that the time had come for decisive action. At five o'clock that afternoon Mandy returned. On either side of the fireplace her parents were respectively seated, grim and hostile. All the brightness died out of the girl's face.

"Mandy," began her mother, solemnly, "Mr. Gleason and C'rell Newman were here to-day, and that miserable drunken wretch struck Mr. Gleason in the face. I don't believe he will ever come here again."

"Gleason brought it on himself," retorted Nathan, with the Alger mouth tense. "He drew him to it. I don't blame C'rell a bit."

"Mandy," pursued her mother, "you must write a note to Mr. Gleason an tell him how sorry you are. Tell him that C'rell Newman will never darken your door again."

"Tell him you're going to marry C'rell Newman!" shouted her father, feeling that strategy was no longer available.

"Do as I tell you," said Phebe, her voice rising and her eyes snapping. "I've promised you to Mr. Gleason." "An' I've promised you to C'rell," thundered Nathan, bringing his fist down upon the oaken table.

"Mandy stood in the center of the room with her head bent, her lashes touching her cheeks, her arms hanging before her with interlaced fingers. Her lips moved once as if to speak, and closed again. Then her slender shoulders seemed to square themselves, and her fingers gripped each other closer.

"Pa, ma, you can't promise me—you can't dispose of me, either of you," she said in low, faltering, but clear tones. "I'm married!"

An awful silence followed. Phebe Alger said afterward that she felt as though many had slapped her in the face. Undoubtedly that action would

OBITUARY.

Elizabeth Knickerbocker Taft was born in Livonia township, Dec. 1, 1829, and so was in her seventy-eighth year at the time of her death, which occurred Friday afternoon Nov. 1, at her late home in this village. She spent her entire life in and near Plymouth. Oct. 24, 1847, she was married to Hiram Taft, now deceased. Nine children were born to them, only two of whom survive to mourn her loss, Alfred H. of Detroit and Adelbert A. of Plymouth. Death was due to old age. The high esteem in which Mrs. Taft was held was abundantly testified in the beautiful floral offerings and the large attendance of friends and neighbors at the funeral which was held from the late home Sunday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock, Rev. Hugh Ronald officiating. Interment in the old Baptist cemetery.

Mr. Carl Wagonshultz died at his home half mile west of the village on Monday, Oct. 28. He had been confined to his bed for several months and when the end came passed away without a struggle, death being due to cancer of the stomach. Among his friends and relatives he was highly regarded because of his many good qualities and kindness of heart, being ever ready to assist in neighborly acts in time of need or trouble.

Mr. Wagonshultz was born in Haslan, Germany, State of Baremburch, and came to America in 1876, taking up his residence in Livonia township, where he resided for three years. He then moved to Farmington and lived there for 15 years. In 1898 he moved to Plymouth, where he resided until death called him. Mr. Wagonshultz was 66 years of age.

The funeral was held at the German Lutheran church, of which he had always been a very active member—a good christian man. He is survived by the following children: Mrs. E. H. Partridge, Jr., Mrs. M. G. Partridge, Mrs. J. E. Brennan, Otto, Frank and Charles, Mrs. John Franklin and Mrs. J. H. Ford of Northville.

The scarcity of ready currency is being felt all over the country, and Plymouth is no exception. There is no cause for alarm, however, as matters will soon adjust themselves again. The recent slump in stocks and bonds in Wall street is said to be the cause of the present trouble.

Chas. Decker and Walter Gale, living west of the village, succeeded in capturing one of the largest raccoons the other night that has been caught in this vicinity for some time, it weighing 27 lbs. They are satisfied that they have the thief who has been visiting their chicken roosts of late.

Ran Past The Target.

The last east-bound Pere Marquette passenger due here at 8:30 last Friday evening ran into another train crossing the track at the junction. The passenger was coming at a great speed and although the target was set against him the engineer seemed to have lost control of his engine and he ran into a freight being made up, striking the last car in the line, and throwing it over against the target, which was being tended by John Weston, an old man 70 years of age. The target was smashed and came down upon Weston, breaking his leg in two places. The passenger ran three or four car lengths before it was stopped, the passengers experiencing quite a jar when the engine struck the freight car. The engineer claimed the air brakes would not work, although he said they were all right when last used at South Lyon. The statement of the engineer regarding the brakes seems to be taken with some degree of doubt. Weston was quite seriously injured and if he recovers will always be a cripple, so says the attending doctor.

SERIAL STORY

The Princess Elopes

By HAROLD McGRATH

Author of "The Man on the Box," "Hearts and Masks," Etc.

(Copyright, 1926, Bobbs-Merrill Co.)

SYNOPSIS.

Arthur Warrington, American consul to Barschett, tells how reigning Grand Duke attempts to force his niece, Princess Hildegarde, to marry Prince Doppelkinn, an old widower. Warrington does not know the princess even by sight. While horseback riding in the country he overtakes her and he seeks accommodations in a dilapidated castle. Here he finds two women and an old man servant. One woman is Princess Hildegarde and the other a friend, Hon. Betty Moore, of England. They detain him to witness a mock marriage between the princess and a disgraced army officer, Steinbock, done for the purpose of selling the grand duke. Steinbock attempts to kiss the princess and she is rescued by Warrington. Scharfenstein disappears for good. Max Scharfenstein, an old American friend of Warrington's reaches Barschett. Warrington tells him of the princess. Scharfenstein shows Warrington a locket with a picture of a woman inside. It was on his neck when he, as a boy, was picked up and adopted by his foster father, whose name he was given. He believes it to be a picture of his mother. The grand duke announces to the princess that she is to marry Doppelkinn the following week. During a morning ride she plans to escape. She meets Scharfenstein.

"Oh, I am curious to know. Bauer will tell it to every one in Barschett that you overpay for things, and from now on you will have to figure living on a basis of crowns."

It is worth any price to hear a pretty woman laugh. What a fine beginning for a day!

"May misfortune be kind enough to bring you this way again, Herr!" Bauer cried joyfully, not to say ambiguously.

"Listen to that!" laughed the girl, her eyes shining like the water in the sun. "But he means only to thank your generosity. Now,"—with a severe frown,— "how much do I owe you? Take care; I've only a few pieces of silver in my purse."

"Why, Fraulein, you owe me nothing; I am even in debt to you for this very crown." Which proved that Bauer had had his lesson in courtiership.

The assistant soon brought forth the girl's restive filly. Max sprang to her aid. How light her foot was in his palm! (She could easily have mounted alone, such was her skill; but there's the woman of it.)

"I am going toward the Pass," she said, reading the half-veiled appeal in his blue eyes.

"Which way is that?" he asked, swinging into his own saddle.

"That way," nodding toward the south. After all, there could be no harm in two or three hours their paths would separate for ever.

"Why," delightedly,—"I am going that way myself."

Old Bauer watched them till they disappeared around a turn in the road. He returned to his forge, shaking his head as if confronted by a problem too abstruse even for his German mind.

"Well, he's an American, so I will not waste any pity on him. The pity is that she must wed old Red-nose."

It would have been if she had!

So the princess and Prince Charming rode into the country, and they talked about a thousand and one things. Had she ever been to France? Yes. To England? She had received part of her education there. Did she know the Princess Hildegarde? Slightly. What was she like? She was a madcap, irresponsible, but very much abused. Did she know Mr. Warrington, the American consul? She had seen him on his morning rides. Wasn't it a fine world? It was, indeed.

"Follow me!" she cried suddenly, even daintily.

A stone wall, three feet high, ran along at their right. The foreground was hard and firm. Pressing the reins on the filly's withers, she made straight for the wall, cleared it, and drew up on the other side. Now Max hadn't the least idea that the horse under him was a hunter, so I might very well say that he took his life in his hands as he followed her. But Dandy knew his business. He took the wall without effort. A warm glow went over Max when he found that he hadn't broken his neck. Together they galloped down the field and came back for the return jump. This, too, was made easily. Max's admiration knew no bounds. It was a dangerous pastime in more ways than one.

At eight o'clock they turned toward home, talking about another thousand and one things.

"It has been a delightful ride," suggested Max, with an eye to the future.

"I take this road nearly every morning," said she, looking out upon the water, which was ruffling itself and quarreling along the sandy shores.

Max said nothing, but he at once made up his mind that he would take the same road provided he could in any reasonable manner get rid of her.

"Did you enjoy the ride?" asked the Honorable Betty, as her highness came in to breakfast. There were no formalities in the princess's apartments. "Beautifully!" Her highness guiltily wondered if there was any logical way to keep Betty in the house for the next few mornings. She sat down and sipped her tea. "The duke talked to me last night. Steinbock played double."

"What?"

"Yes. He sold us to the duke, who patiently waited for me to speak. Betty, I am a fool. But I shall never marry Doppelkinn. That is settled."

"I suppose he will be inviting me to return to England," said Betty shrewdly.

"Not for the present."

"And I have just grown to love the place,"—pathetically. "Mr. Warrington has asked me to ride with him afternoons. His ankle prevents him from taking the long morning jaunts. If it will not interfere with your plans, dear—"

"Accept, by all means," interrupted her highness. "He is a capital horseman." She smiled mysteriously. Happily her companion was absorbed in thought and did not see this smile.

Max came in at a quarter of ten, went to tub, and came down in time for the eggs.

"Have a good ride?" I asked.

"Bully! Beautiful country!" He was enthusiastic.

"How these healthy animals eat!" I thought as I observed him occasionally.

"Wish I could go with you," I said, but half-heartedly.

"I'll get the lay of the land quick enough," he replied.

The rascal! Not a word about the girl that morning, or the next, or until Thursday morning. If only I had known! But Fate knows her business better than I do, and she was handling the affair. But long rides of a morn-blank astonishment, "that there is a petticoat on horseback in this ducky that you do not know?"

"I don't know any woman by the name of Hildegarde von Heidehoff; on my word of honor, Max, I don't."

"Old Bauer, the blacksmith, knew her."

Bauer? All my suspicions returned. "Describe the girl to me."

"Handsome figure, masses of black hair, great black eyes that are full of good fun, a delicate nose, and I might add, a very kissable mouth."

"What! have you kissed her?" I exclaimed.

"No, no! Only, I'd like to."

"H'm! You've made quite a study. She must be visiting some one nearby. There is an old castle three miles west of the smithy. Did she speak English?"

"Yes,"—excitedly.

"That accounts for it. An old English nobleman lives over there during the summer months, and it is not improbable that she is one of his guests." In my heart I knew that her highness was up to some of her tricks again, but there was no need of her shattering good old Max's heart. Yet I felt bound to say: "Why not look into the purse? There might be something there to prove her identity."

"Look into her purse?"—horrified.

"You wouldn't have me peeping into a woman's purse, would you? Suppose there should be a box of rouge? Her cheeks were red."

"Quite likely."

"Or a powder-puff."

"Even more likely."

"Or—"

"Or a love letter."

"I have my doubts," said I.

"Well, if you do not know who she is, I'll find out,"—undismayed.

Doubtless he would; he was a persistent old beggar, was Max.

A Million on February 30

By A. Walter Utting

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

When Robert Faylon's wealth reached the two million mark, he lay ill unto death. But, though the scythe-bearer was advancing to meet him, still gleamed in his eye the look of cunning so well known to his associates.

Two days after he was stricken his nephew called to see him—Tommy Faylon, upon whom he had lavished a wealth of care, tried to pilot on that particular financial sea on which he had made his millions, but who have proved such a great disappointment to him.

The elder man had, so to speak, chartered one boat and continued sailing in it until it reached the chosen port; the nephew engaged an entire fleet, seeing one after another founder, but hoping always to have one arrive safely at the wished-for destination. And when he visited his uncle, Tommy usually went to report that there had been a wreck—and that he wanted to start all over with stronger, more up-to-date craft.

Robert Faylon groaned, even above the groans provoked by his ailment, when Tommy was announced. Tommy had certainly been industrious. He had sold eggs, goats, horses, and he had run a bucket shop, superintended a meat market, published a newspaper, and done a dozen and one other things.

"Well, what now?" the sick man asked wearily.

Tommy tendered solicitations as to his relative's health; he was pained to see his uncle under the weather. "But you're a stickler," he added; "you'll live 50 more years." Then glibly he went on to tell how, because of the treachery of a partner, he had failed to make good as a sideshow proprietor. "The fellow just ran away with the fat woman and the funds at the same time. But I've cut out the things that people are used to, and which need partners. I've got something brand new," he rattled enthusiastically. "There's a field for it, and when there's a field for anything there's money in it."

The dying man looked at him pityingly. "Mulberry Sellers," he groaned, "tell me about it."

And Tommy did. He wanted to launch out into an information bureau business, to furnish every one needful with an idea. He would tell one man how to advertise so that he could bring prosperity to his business; another how to write a book; another the cost and means of hauling timber from Siberia to Patagonia; another how to reach a girl's heart. And so on ad infinitum. "Besides which," he added, "I'm dead in love, and the girl wants to see me in business before we get married. If I get started she'll say 'Yes' in a hurry."

Uncle Robert said: "If you can tell other people how to do things, why in the world can't you tell yourself how to get on without my aid? That would be proof of your ability."

"I could," Tommy replied, "if I had the capital to start the business with."

"Well, call to-morrow, and we'll see what is to be done," said Robert Faylon.

He died overnight. But before he died he summoned his lawyer and made a new will, which contained a clause that staggered everybody. In brief, it was that if Tommy married the choice of his heart on February 30, he would get $1,000,000 of his wealth; if he failed to do this, then he must be satisfied with a paltry $500, and the rest would go to charity.

"February 30!" exclaimed Tommy, listening, "why, there is no such date in the year."

"Mr. Faylon believed there is," said the lawyer, "and thinks that you, with your latest scheme, should be able to pick it out from the other days on the calendar."

The month of February, as every one knows, consists of 28 days. Once every four years, with a few exceptions, it takes an extra day. But 30! Whoever heard of there being 30 days in February?

In woman's wit lies the solution of many apparently unfathomable problems. Tommy went to the home of Alice Detwar, "the girl."

"Your uncle wanted to turn you down gracefully," she suggested.

"If he thought there was a February 30, I guess I can find it," said Tommy.

"And when I do we'll get married, eh?"

During the month of September, 1903, Tommy Faylon spent his every waking hour poring over calendars, almanacs and rare works in the public libraries and reporting his failures to his sweetheart.

In October he tried a different campaign. He procured books on puzzles, charades, rebuses, and everything that dealt with mind-tangling propositions. Furrows appeared on his brow, lines creased his cheeks, his eyes retreated in their wells, and he grew nervous.

His uncle's doctor advised him healthfully. "Stop looking in books, you're wearing your life away. Take a sea trip; get health restoring balm from ocean air; put yourself where you can't see a book."

And on the heels of this advice came word from Alice Detwar that her father wanted to take her for a trip to Hawaii, "just for the sea voyage, and to get experience she would never have if she married Tommy Faylon."

She was departing so soon he would have no opportunity of seeing her before she left.

Tommy hunted up the doctor. "I'd follow your advice," he said, "but I haven't the money. To travel costs money."

"Why not take the five hundred," the physician suggested, "and by using it help gain the larger sum? Pay where you have to, and work your passage where you can."

Soon Tommy was on the way to the Pacific coast. Alice had left by boat when he reached there, so he was quick to charter passage on the next steamer to put forth. Like a will of the wisp she fitted just ahead of him wherever he went, but he continued. In January he found her in Japan.

"But before February is ended," she told him, "father says I will be on the ocean on the way home."

"I'll return with you," he informed her.

And that is how they came to sail from Yokohama on February something or other, a fact which recalled to his mind that he was no nearer discovering a February 30 than he had ever been.

The passengers on the vessel watched the two lovers curiously. It chanced there was a clergyman on board, and it was not long before many were saying it would be a splendid idea for him to perform the ceremony of marriage on board the ship. But Tommy shook his head.

"I have no more chance of marrying her," he said to one man, "than I have of finding a February 30."

But hope was buoyed finally. The captain requested him to call in his parlor. He did so. There he found Alice, her father, the minister and four passengers, besides the captain.

"I understand," said the captain, "that you wish this reverend gentleman to marry you to Miss Detwar."

"It has been said so in a joking way, I think," stammered Tommy.

"We may as well have the ceremony now, then," said Alice quickly. "We're all here, and there are witnesses enough."

"February 30," groaned Tommy.

"Take hold of hands," commanded the minister, and before Tommy Faylon recovered his wits he found himself married to the girl of his choice.

"I am unhappy," he said. But consolingly looking into his wife's eyes. "I guess now I have you I'll make the best of it. I've lost a million dollars, but I think we can trudge along on nothing at all, if necessary."

"How have you lost a million?" asked the captain. And Tommy told him, although in the listening there was a glint of humor in the captain's eyes.

"I must, then, be the first one to make you acquainted with a fact that will be of interest to you. You must know that, in traveling eastward, from Yokohama to San Francisco, a day's time is gained. There must be a day apart from those we see mapped on the calendar. Now let me tell you, this is leap year—1904. Yesterday was February 29, but to-day is not March 1. When the sun shines tomorrow morning it will usher in the first day of the month of March. What, then, is to-day?"

Tommy gasped. "February 30!" he cried.

And even the minister acknowledged that the horripole roughly executed by the young married man was permissible.

"And the best of it was," said Tommy, writing to the lawyer when he received the bequest, "that Alice thought out the whole thing, and urged her father to take her to the other side of the Pacific, knowing I would follow her and so win the day. How's that for a girl?"

A One-Legged Athlete.

When Harry Haskins Smith of this city entered the Scranton athletic carnival the other day he was not regarded as a very formidable competitor by the other boys, because he has but one leg. When the carnival was over he had all the honors that were distributed. Ground-gaining rolls, hand-springs, headsprings, horizontal bar work, all were performed by the one-legged youth.

When Smith was seven years old he climbed under a freight train for a baseball, and the train amputated one leg.

He did not cry or faint, but said: "Don't tell mother. She would worry."

He rides a bicycle well, and when he uses his crutches, which he disdains except when in a hurry, he can run or walk as fast as the average individual.

Smith has a sunny disposition and has never been known to "pick" a fight. When another boy is the aggressor he can give a good account of himself without using crutches or any support. He is a clever boxer and can sidestep and keep his balance on one foot—Wilkesbarre (Pa.) Dispatch.

GEORGE KEPT HIM BUSY.

Matrimonial Engagements Seemed Aways in Order.

A well-known Virginia clergyman, sometime president of William and Mary college, was married three times and on each occasion the ceremony was performed by his brother, an even more renowned bishop. When the first marriage took place, the bishop had to refuse a tempting invitation from an old friend because—so the letter ran—"I am going up to Williamsburg on that date to marry my brother George."

The same friend happened to be on the train with him, years afterward, when he was traveling to the second ceremony. "I am going to marry my brother George," the bishop explained, benignly, after the business of greeting was over. Again many years passed, and the same journey was taken once more for the same purpose. By a strange coincidence, the identical friend ran into the bishop as they hurried through the depot to their respective trains. "Where going bishop?" the former sang out as they grasped hands and dashed by each other.

"I am going where I am always going," the answer came back, ponderously. "to marry my brother George!"—Harper's Weekly.

The Bright Firstborn.

They were discussing the law of entail—the English law bequeathing the bulk of the family property to the eldest son.

"There is 50 per cent of logic in that law," said a physician, "and if the family property went to the firstborn, whether son or daughter, the law would contain 100 per cent of logic. For the first born child is practically always the best—best in brain, in build, in beauty, in everything."

"Why is this so? It is because married people love one another more profoundly at the beginning than afterward; for love, like all things, grows old, grows weak, often dies."

"Mrs. Craigie—John Oliver Hobbes—was a first born child. So was Marie Corelli. So was Richard Mansfield. So were Joseph Chamberlain, Lord Kitchener, Max Muller, Henry Irving, George Meredith."

"Look back into the past, and we see again the prominence of the firstborn, among them Mohammed, Confucius, Raphael, Milton, Dante, Goethe, Byron, Shelly and Helms."

Knew What Was Coming.

Wife—Well, I declare. Here's an old school friend of mine who has just made a fortune.

Husband—All right, my dear. Go ahead. Tell me that you might have married him.

HER "BEST FRIEND."

A Woman Thus Speaks of Postum.

We usually consider our best friends those who treat us best.

Some persons think coffee a real friend, but watch it carefully awhile and observe that it is one of the meanest of all enemies for it stabs one while professing friendship.

Coffee contains a poisonous drug—caffeine—which injures the delicate nervous system and frequently sets up disease in one or more organs of the body, if its use is persisted in.

"I had heart palpitation and nervousness for four years and the doctor told me the trouble was caused by coffee. He advised me to leave it off, but I thought I could not," writes a Wis. lady.

"On the advice of a friend I tried Postum Food Coffee and it so satisfied me—that I did not care for coffee after a few days' trial of Postum."

"As weeks went by and I continued to use Postum my weight increased from 98 to 118 pounds, and the heart trouble left me. I have used it a year now, and am stronger than I ever was. I can hustle up stairs without any heart palpitation, and I am cured of nervousness."

"My children are very fond of Postum and it agrees with them. My sister liked it when she drank it at my house, but not when she made it at her own home. Now she has learned to make it right, boil it according to directions, and has become very fond of it. You may use my name if you wish, as I am not ashamed of praising my best friend—Postum."

"Hang You, Who's Talking About Getting Married?"

ing with a pretty girl are not safe for any bachelor.

Thursday morning he came in late. He dropped something on the table. On inspection I found it to be a woman's handkerchief purse.

"Where the deuce did you get that?" I asked, mighty curious.

"By George! but I've been enjoying the most enchanting adventure; such as you read out of a book. I'm inclined to believe that I shall enjoy my studies in old Barschett."

"But where did you get this?" If there was a girl around, I wanted to know all about it.

"She dropped it."

"She dropped it!" I repeated. "What she? Why, you old tow-head, have you been flirting at this hour of the morning?"

"Handsome as a picture!"

"Ha! the ideal at last,"—ironically. "Blond, of course."

"Dark as a Spaniard, and rides like Diana." His enthusiasm was not to be lightly passed over.

"Never heard of Diana riding," said I; "always saw her pictured as going afoot."

"Don't be an ass! You know very well what I mean."

"I've no argument to offer, nor any picture to prove my case. You've had an adventure; give it up, every bit of it."

"One of the finest horsewomen I ever saw. Took a wall three feet high the other morning, just to see if I dared follow. Lucky Dandy is a hunter, or I'd have broken my neck."

"Very interesting." Then of a sudden a thought flashed through my head and out again. "Anybody with her?"

"Only myself these three mornings."

"H'm! Did you get as far as names?"

"Yes; I told her mine. Who is Hildegarde von Heidehoff?"

"Heidehoff?" I was puzzled. My suspicions evaporated. "I can't say that I know any one by that name. Sure it was Heidehoff?"

"Do you mean to tell me," with

"Do not let it get serious, my boy," I warned. "You could not marry any one in this country."

"Why not?"

"Have you been regularly baptized? Was your father? Was your grandfather? Unless you can answer these simplest of questions and prove them, you could not get a license; and no priest or preacher would dare marry you without a license."

"Hang you, who's talking about getting married? All I want to know is, who is Hildegarde von Heidehoff, and how am I to return her purse? I shall ask the blacksmith."

"Do so,"—taking up my egg spoon. Max slipped the purse into his breast-pocket and sat down.

Red Cans for Kansas.

St. Louis.—Kansas has always been noted for doing curious things, but the story to the effect that Gov. Hoch has signed a bill requiring the use of red cans for gasoline reaches the lovely limit. The law makes it unlawful for dealers to sell gasoline in any but red receptacles, and is entitled, by the correspondent of Automobile Topics states, "An act to protect hired girls and absent-minded men."

Development of Bruges.

Bruges is better known to Americans through Longfellow's poem on its famous belfry than in any other way. The romantic pageantry of the past which the poet calls to mind appeals more to the imagination than modern statistics of commercial expansion. But Bruges has more than a belfry. The other day its new seaport, Heyst, was formally opened. Heyst is connected with Bruges by a new canal, which ends in an artificial harbor created by a breakwater two-thirds of a mile long. It is designed to make Bruges a competitor with Antwerp for ocean trade.—Youth's Companion.

Mandy's Emancipation

By Ella Randall Pearce

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles)

'Mandy did not resemble either of her parents. So far as appearances were concerned, one might trace a sort of composite likeness. There was the Osborn nose, but the prominent hump of that feature was modified, in her case, to an aristocratic little curve, and the straight, red mouth would have been the Alger mouth but for the dimples at the corners.

As 'Mandy grew up the same antagonistic spirit grew with her parents. She was very pretty, and her childish ways clung to her. At 19, she was slight and undeveloped, with her soft blue eyes wide open and innocent as a baby's under their curling brown lashes, her cheeks round and pink, her yellow hair brushed loosely back from her white forehead and knotted in a cluster of curls at the back of her neck. Her dresses barely concealed the slim, round ankles, and she moved with a quaint grace of manner that made people call her "old-fashioned."

Frank Day and 'Mandy had been like brother and sister since Frank had appeared at the Jersey farmhouse, a poor, forlorn orphan boy from the city, and asked for work.

Nathan Alger gave him a chance on the farm, and he proved such a quiet, trusty, active worker that he kept him, allowing him to go to the village school with 'Mandy during the winter and treating him as one of his household. He was only two years older than 'Mandy, and he said pa and ma just as she did, and considered himself lucky that he escaped parental disputation.

"'Bout time 'Mandy was thinkin' of gettin' married, ain't it?" said Nathan, one evening.

"Married! That child!" replied the wife. "Are you in such a great hurry to get rid of her?"

"Rid of her? Lor' no, I'll keep her right here all her life."

"An' let her be a lonely, spiteful old maid! Nice future for a pretty young girl!"

Nathan smiled covertly.

"'Mandy is pretty," he said. "An' I guess others see it, mother. 'Crell Newman can't keep his eyes off her at meetin'."

"'Crell Newman!" repeated Mrs. Alger contemptuously. "He needn't make eyes at my daughter."

"What's the matter with him?"

"I don't like his family."

"They're rich," said Nathan, who was inclined to place a high estimate upon an extensive tract of fertile land.

"'H'm, I don't like the Newmans, an' 'Crell's wild."

Mrs. Phebe had her plans for 'Mandy, but it was useless to broach them then. She had not been visiting the Managuan store for nothing, when she could buy goods cheaper in Asbury Park. She knew why she always took 'Mandy with her, and why a deep delight possessed her soul when the proprietor's son, a pale, slender, light-haired young man, who sat at the desk, peered out between the wires that surrounded him and forgot to attend to his accounts until after mother and daughter had left the store.

Arthur Gleason was dignified and intellectual, and his natty attire and debonaire air had made a deep impression upon Manasquan belles.

Corell was really very fond of the slender, golden-haired girl, and the Newmans had always been known to be "very sot in their ways."

Young Gleason from New York was a captive to 'Mandy's fresh charms also, and despite his languid effeminacy, he was not without a will of his own. He had been a spoiled child at home and used to having his way in all matters. Now he was determined that no Jersey farmer should triumph over him.

Frank came out of the barn one day. He saw a blue skirt whisking into the summer kitchen, which was used only for storage purposes then. Walking up to the little square window, he peered in. To his surprise he saw 'Mandy sitting in the little rush-bottomed chair near the table, with her face buried in her apron. In an instant he was beside her.

"What's the matter, sis?" he asked, gently.

"'Mandy raised her tear-stained face. "Oh, Frank, I'm so wretched," she said.

"Pa and ma at it again?"

"It's nothing new," replied the girl hopelessly. "You see what they're trying to do. They think I haven't got any feelings."

"Which one do you like best?" asked Frank, as he had done once before.

"I don't know, I don't know!" wailed 'Mandy. "They're both nice, and they both want to marry me; but if I marry one, pa'll disown me, and if I marry the other, ma'll never speak to me again. Oh, I wish I was dead!"

She covered her face with her apron again.

"There, sis, don't worry," said Frank, stroking her rippling hair and trying to comfort her, just as he used to do in the old school days. "I wish I could help you. Come, let's talk it over."

The next day, during 'Mandy's temporary absence from home, her affairs approached a crisis. Arthur Gleason and Corell Newman had driven up to the Alger gate at the same time and alighted together. Unpleasant words were exchanged, and Corell, who had been indulging the Newman threat, struck the storekeeper.
