Did you ever hear yourself talk, sing or play?

Talk about entertainment there is nothing that approaches the fun and fascination of making records at home on the

Edison Phonograph

THE EDISON will record what you or your friends say, or sing, or play, and then instantly reproduce it just as clearly and faithfully as the Records you buy are reproduced. This is a feature of the Edison Phonograph

You can send your voice to a friend, preserve the sayings of children, record your progress as a speaker, a singer or a musician. Anyone can make records on an Edison. It requires no special machines. The blank records can be used over and over.

SPIRIT OF THE DAY

Stevens and Harvey Are Acquitted

Some two months ago the home of Miss Mary Barber, an aged lady living alone on a farm about two miles south of town, was entered at midnight by a masked man, beaten about the hands, feet and head and robbed of $500 in cash, part of the money being in gold. She lay helpless in her home until a neighbor next morning found her and who called a doctor and informed deputy sheriff Springer of the robbery. After several weeks of suffering the lady died, her death being more or less the result of the exposure and shock of her night's experience.

George Harvey was notified the next day to be paying store bills and otherwise flourishing about considerable gold coin. Deputy Springer arrested him and taking him before Justice Campbell, Harvey owned up that Charles alias "Nippy" Stevens had induced him to accompany Stevens to the house of Miss Barber and while he (Harvey) stood guard outside, Stevens went in and beat the old lady and robbed her of her money.

Stevens was arrested and in Justice court pleaded not guilty, but upon examination was held by Justice Campbell to the circuit court for trial. Harvey was also bound over.

The trial of Stevens came on before Judge Homer last week Tuesday and after two days' taken up in bringing the evidence before the jury, that body brought in a verdict of not guilty.

Harvey told the same story in the circuit court that he told in the lower court. Other corroborating evidence was submitted. Stevens had a clever attorney (paid for by the county) and he brought out that while Stevens had spent about $100 right after the robbery, the latter claimed he was not near the place of robbery and that the money he spent was what he had saved up and $30 he had borrowed from his brother. The jury believed him and his witnesses and disbelieved Harvey. The attorney for Stevens also intimated in his plea to the jury that Harvey's brother Elmer, a witness for the prosecution, was implicated with him in the affair. Stevens' little child was also in court and the defense made the most of a plea of sympathy.

George Harvey's trial came off before the same court last Friday and as a natural result he was also acquitted, though the day before he told of how he was concerned in the robbery.

The result of the two trials has caused some very caustic comment by the people of Plymouth in which courts, juries and prosecutors are not highly complimented.

A New Business Firm Next Number on

Lecture Course

Plymouth is to have a new business firm. Wm. Gayde and Henry Fisher have formed a co-partnership and will conduct a farm implement business here. The new firm, which will be known as Gayde & Fisher will carry a full line of farming implements, wagons, buggies, etc. There ware room will be located in the building on the north side of Mr. Fisher's blacksmith shop in north village. Both gentlemen are well known and hustling business men of Plymouth, and the MAIL wishes them unbounded success in their new business enterprise.

The next number on the lecture course comes on Friday, February 21st. This number is a lecture by Dr. George R. Stuart. Dr. Stuart is a speaker of wide reputation. He is heard with great pleasure and profit by his audiences. There are few men on the lecture platform today whom the people hear more gladly and from whom they receive more inspiration and helpful instruction. Several Plymouth residents have heard this lecturer and declare him to be very fine. One of the best critics has said of him: "I have heard him three times and I feel that I have made the discovery of a really great master of assemblies. I laughed until I was on the verge of collapse, then I was rescued by a wise remark worthy of a philosopher. I wept like a little child as he led me through scenes of boyish delight or sympathy. Then he lifted me to heights of moral vision which I hope I may never forsake. Great is the mission of humor; great is the cleansing power of tears which are without regret; great is the realm of the noble life, and George Stuart has an passport to all."

Council Names Election Committees

At a recent meeting of the village council the following election committees were appointed for the coming village election:

Registration—E. E. Caster, Anson Hearn and Chas. Curtis.

Election Committee—A. Jones, L. Hillmer, E. E. Caster and Chas. Curtis.

Election Commissioners—Fred Schrader and Edward Gayde.

A Letter From the Sunny South

Lafayette Dean, who with George Bryant left Plymouth several weeks ago for an extended trip through the southern states, writes from Jacksonville, Florida, that although in poor health at the time of leaving here, that they are now in the best of health and are thoroughly enjoying their trip. Mr. Dean says up to date, (Feb. 10th) they had traveled fourteen hundred miles almost entirely by daylight, remaining over every night in the town or city where night overtakes them, giving them a good chance to rest and at the same time take in the sights. They spent ten days in Pensacola, Florida, the oldest city in the U. S., but not the thirteenth, as the colored people predominate and they seem to have a chronic indisposition for exertion. From there they went to Jacksonville, where they expected to remain about one week. Mr. Dean says they have their route mapped out for many cities ahead and expect to return via Washington. He says the weather is very warm and pleasant there, only requiring one sheet for bed covering at night and flowers are in full bloom like June time in Michigan.

Special Services

The First Presbyterian church begins a series of special meetings on Sunday night, Feb. 23rd. These meetings will be held every night except Saturday night. On Sunday night, the services will begin at 7 o'clock. During the week they will open at 7:30 o'clock. The pastor of the church, Rev. B. F. Farber, will do the preaching. He is to be assisted by a singer from Detroit. Mr. Augustus Schults comes to conduct the song services and do solo work. He has a fine baritone voice and a pleasing personality. He has had much experience in directing congregational singing and he will conduct a song service each evening. A part of the time another singer, Mr. I. B. Renshaw, will be present to help in these services. These meetings are calculated to do good for our community and the public is most cordially invited to attend. Come and bring a friend with you.

Dog Scares Away Burglars

About one o'clock Monday morning Henry Heide, who resides just north-east of the Wilcox mill was awakened by the barking of his dog, which was soon followed by the breaking of the lock on the back kitchen door. The continued barking of the dog evidently scared the burglars away for when Mr. Heide reached the door he saw two men beating a hasty retreat down the road.

Ceylon Tea.

Tea plantations in Ceylon have been in existence only 30 years, yet the annual exports of black tea amount to nearly $20,000,000 in value. Formerly coffee constituted Ceylon's main industry, but after a disease of the plant in 1880 its cultivation was discontinued. Many planters, however, recouped themselves by tea and rubber. Thanks chiefly to the former article, the island's old prosperity revived. Today Ceylon boasts 1,500 plantations.

Plant necessary to tea cultivation is costly but very labor-saving. The work itself is not hard; only the climate makes it irksome. What is wanted mainly of employees is to watch machinery and feed it from the stock of tea leaves awaiting treatment. The workers are not Singhalese, but natives of southern India. A laborer's wages vary from eight to sixteen cents a day, while a foreman's salary averages $200 a month.—Harper's Weekly.

Unpicked Grapes Go to the Poor.

A curious old law, which dates from 1778, has been used to sentence the owner of a vineyard at Capestang, near Beziers, France, to a fine and costs for picking her own grapes. She was picking the grapes which had been left on the vines in her vineyard after the fall gathering, when the policeman told her that she was committing an offense against the law, as all grapes left on the vines after the harvest were the property of the poor.

SERIAL STORY

STANTON WINS

CHAPTER I

The Man Who Dared.

The official starter let his raised arm fall and leaped forward, peering across the blended glare and darkness. "What?" he shouted, above the pulsating roar of the eleven racing machines lined up before the judges' stand. "What?"

There was a flurry around the central car, whose driver leaned from his seat to stare down at the man who had slipped from beside him to the ground. The great crowd congesting the grand-stand pressed closer to the barrier, starting also, commenting and conjecturing.

"The mechanician of the Mercury is off his car!"

"Fainted—"

"Fell—"

"The automobiles hadn't started; he must be sick."

The referee was already pushing his way back, bringing the report from the hastily summoned surgeon.

"Heart disease," he announced, right and left. "Stanton's mechanician just dropped off his seat, dead."

But Stanton himself had already swung out of his car, with the energetic decision that marked his every movement.

"My man is out," he tersely stated to the starter. "I've got to run over to my camp and get another. Will you hold the start for me?"

The question was rather a demand than a request. There was scarcely one among the vast audience who would not have felt the sparkle gone from this strong black wine of sport they had come to sip, if Ralph Stanton had been withdrawn from the twenty-four-hour contest. He had not only fame as a skillful and scientific racer; he had the reputation of being the most spectacularly reckless driver in America, whose death could be but a question of time and whose record of accidents and victories verged on the appalling. He knew his value as an attraction, and the starter knew it, although preserving lissuosity.

"Five minutes," the official conceded, and drew out his watch.

Already a stream of men were running toward the Mercury camp with the news. Stanton sprang into his machine, deftly sent it forward out of the line, and shot around into the entrance to the huge oval field edged by the brick track, a mob of white ribbons bordering a green meadow.

The row of electric-lighted tents, each numbered and named for its own racing car, was in a turmoil of excitement. But most animated was the group before the tent marked "Mercury."

"Durand's down and out—leave the other man," called Stanton, holding his nose, flaming red. "Quick, you!"

But no one stepped forward from the cluster of factory men and mechanics. Only the assistant manager of the Mercury company responded to the demand:

"Yes, got one of you boys. I'll make it right with you. You, Jones."

"I'm married, sir," refused Jones succinctly.

"Well, you then, Walters. Good heavens, man! what do you mean?"

For the burly Walters backed away, actually pale.

"I'll dig potatoes, first, sir."

"Why, you used to race?"

"Not with Stanton, sir."

There was a low murmur of approval among his mates, and a drawing together for support. Stanton stepped down from his car, snatching of his mask to show a dark, strong face grim with anger and contempt.

"You wretched, backboneless coward!" he hurled at them, his blue-black eyes flashing over the group. "Do you know what I and the company stand to lose if I'm disqualified for lack of one of you jellyfish to sit beside me and pump oil? Isn't there a man in the camp? I'll give fifty dollars myself to the one who goes out, a hundred if I win."

"I'll promise twice that," eagerly supplemented Green, the assistant manager. He had private bets on Stanton.

Not one of the clustered workmen moved.

"Damn you!" pronounced the driver, bitterly and comprehensively. "I'll repeat that offer to the man who will go for the first three hours only, and meanwhile we'll send to New York and find a red-blooded male."

The men looked at one another, but shook their heads.

"No? You won't? You work your miserable bodies three months to earn what I offer for three hours. What's the matter with you, don't I risk my neck?" He turned, sending his powerful voice ringing down the line. "Here, bust the paddock, all of you—" two hundred dollars for a man to ride the next three hours with me!"

"You can't take a man from another camp, Stanton," protested the frantic Mr. Green. "He might trick you, hurt the car."

His appeal went down the wind unheeded, except for one glance from the racer's gleaming eyes.

"He won't trick me," said Stanton. "The crowd stands with me. The Mercury camp is in an uproar, the Mercury camp the center of interest. But no volunteers answered the call. The panting machine, its hood wrapped in jets of violet flame, headlights and tallights shedding vivid illumination around the figure of its bled master, quivered with impotent life and strength. Raging, Stanton stood, watch in hand, his face a set study in scorn.

Suddenly the harsh rasp of the official klaxon soared above the hubbub, warning, summoning.

"Four minutes," panted the despairing assistant manager. "Stanton—"

Some one was running toward them, some one for whom a lane was opened by the spectators from other camps who had congregated.

"Get aboard," called ahead a fresh young voice. "Get aboard; I'll go."

"Thank Heaven for a man!" snarled Stanton, as the runner dashed up. "Why, it's a boy!"

"Floyd," Mr. Green had hysterical. "You'll go?"

"I'll go," assured Floyd, and faced the driver; a slim, youthful figure in a mechanic's blue overalls, his sleeves rolled to the elbows, an aching bare head, his hair soft closely cropped, curling brown hair, tilted back as his steady gray eyes looked up at Stanton.

"You? You couldn't crank a taxi-cab," flung the racer, brutal with disappointment and wrath. "You'd go? A boy?"

"In as old as the driver of the Singer car, and scant five years younger than you—I'm twenty-one," flashed the retort. "And I know all there is about gasoline cars. I guess you're big enough to crank your own motor aren't you, if I can't? You've got thirty seconds left; do you want me?"

Met on his own tone, Stanton gasped, then caught his mask from the man who held it.

"Why don't you get on your clothes?" he demanded savagely. "Are you going to race like that? Jump, you useless coward—can't you pass him his things? Telephone the stand that I'm coming, some one."

There was a wild scurry of preparation, the telephone bell jingled madly. "Yes, Floyd is one of our new factory dancing behind the goggles, the red young mouth smiling below the mask, the shining young curls which the cap failed to cover. He stared, then slowly relaxed into a smile, and went forward.

"The talking done while I'm up, is done by me," stated Stanton forcibly. "Remember."

"Don't you ever need a rest?" queried Floyd.

Stanton opened his lips, and closed them again without speaking. His trained glance went to sweep his opponents, gaging their relative positions, their probable order on the first turn, and his own best move. The successive flashlights on either side were blinding, the atmosphere was suffocating with the exhaust gasoline and acetylene fumes. It was as familiar to him as the odor of sawdust to the circus dweller, as the strong salt wind to a habitant of the coast; the unusual element lay in the boy beside him. Man, he refused to acknowledge him.

The sharp crack of a pistol, the fall of a flag, and the whole struggling flaming flock sprang forward toward the first turn, wheel to wheel in death-edged contest. And Stanton got his mechanician.

The Mercury led the first circuit, as usual. It was very fast, and its pilot took the chances more prudent drivers avoided. Still, the lead was less than the car's own length, two of its closest rivals hanging at its flanks, when they passed the tumultuous grandstand just ahead by again the "death curve." There was a swift movement beside Stanton, the pendant lines streamers floating from his cap were deftly seized and the dust swept from his goggles with a practiced rapidity.

"Car on each side of me, one trying to pass," the clear voice pierced the hearing. "No room next the fence."

Stanton grunted. The boy knew how to rise in a speeding machine, and how to take care of his driver, he noted. Nevertheless, he meant to take that fence side.

And he did. As the other drivers shut off power to take the dangerous bend more slowly, Stanton shot forward at unchanged speed, cut in ahead and swept first around the turn, taking the inside curve. The spectators rose with a universal cry of consternation; the Mercury swerved, almost facing the infield fence, skidding appallingly and lurching drunkenly on two wheels, then righted itself under the steering-wheel in the master's hands, and rushed on, leading by a hundred feet.

The people cheered frantically, the band crashed into raucous music. Stanton's mechanician got up to lean over the back of the flying car and feel the rear casing.

Stanton stood, watch in hand, his face a set study in scorn.

"You're tryin' to tres," he imparted his accents close to the driver's ear.

That was the first time that Stanton noticed that Floyd leaped and blurred his final "g" in moments of excitement. It might have sounded effeminate, if the voice had not been without a tremor. As it was—

At the end of the first hour, the bulletin boards showed the Mercury five laps ahead of its nearest rival. And then Floyd spoke again to his driver.

"What?" Stanton questioned, above the noise of the motor.

"We've got to run in; I'm afraid of the rear inside show. It won't stand another side like the last."

Stanton's mouth shut in a hard line.

"I will not," he stated. "Get back in your place. You can't tell."

"I can."

Stanton declined no reply, sliding past one of the slower cars on the back stretch. To go in meant to lose the whole time gained. As they took the back turn, Floyd again leaped over.

CHILD'S FACE ALL RED SPOTS

632 N. 5th St. Terre Haute, Ind.—"My little nephew, a boy of four years, had a breaking out on his face. It was little red spots at first, then he would rub and scratch and water blisters would form, and wherever the water would run another would come until his face was covered with them. He would cry and fret. His mother got some medicine, but it did not do our good. He would scream and cry and say it hurt. We hardly knew him, his little face was all red spots and blisters. So I begged him to let me put some Cuticura Ointment on them. The next morning I made a strong soap suds with Cuticura Soap and washed his face in the warm suds. The little blisters burst by pressing the cloth on them. After I had his face washed, I put the Cuticura Ointment on and in a short time his little face was all red and dry. I kept using the Cuticura Soap and putting on the Cuticura Ointment and his face got as well and it did not leave a scar. He was entirely cured in about one week and a half." What They Trusted.

Having ascertained his weight on the railway station weighing machine the man said to the porter:

"Isn't it a lack of business foresight to put one of those machines that distributes prizes to persons who guess their own weight correctly, hang up against other scales that they could get weighed on before hand, and thus guess on a sure thing? You must have great faith in human nature, you?"

"Oh, no, sir," said the porter, "but we have in the machine."

Thief's Victims Plead for Him Before the Court

In the world," said Mrs. Little, son's bank had been robbed by Madison. "Yes, he stole my money, but his money was always my money," she added.

"Best fellow you ever saw," said in Howard Landreth, another who was robbed of a purse. "He wouldn't do a thing if he hadn't been drinking some," said Charles Roberts, whose gold watch was stolen.

Robert Riney and Herbert others who were robbed asked forgiveness, and Acting Judge stamped the burglary charge "dismissed."

It afterward developed that the roomers had collected the fee charged by a lawyer to defend Madison. Judge Cavins assessed a small fine on a petit larceny charge.

William Flory, who has served a term in the penitentiary for chicken stealing, was arrested again near Riverside park. Special Police Benjamin found Flory in a house with seven live chickens and one dead fowl. He sent him to central police station, where it was found a charge of cruelty to animals in possession of a fowl. Flory some chickens, wrenched four shoes from a man in a crowd, and was arrested in the city of Longwood, N. Y., by the Humane Society. His case was continued, pending investigation concerning the chickens.

"Monkey Trot" Stirs Guests of a Chicago Hotel

CHICAGO—Everybody did the "Monkey Trot" at a big downtown hotel the other day. Guests, including staid matrons, chorus girls, traveling men, and politicians, joined with chambermaids, bell boys, hallmen, and even the managers and proprietors in executing the latest trot novelty.

Leading the grand march was a sprightly specimen of the thy tree folk—a typical simian. He had been mysteriously checked into the parcel room and left uncalled for. After three days of waiting for somebody to claim him he began to protest.

"Say, boss, there's something wrapped up in a paper here that is making an awful funny noise," said Paul Weinstein, the parcel boy, to Walter Payne, the superintendent of the hotel, a little before the noon hour.

A little crowd gathered around Weinstein when he cautiously removed the wrapper. There was a suit case inside. He sprung the latch. There was a flash of pink skin and dark brown fur. Several persons grabbed at a shadow that bounced off their shoulders.

The small monkey executed an undulating streak in a circuit of the lobby, over the backs of the chairs and tables. Down the middle aisle he was followed. At a group of statuary he shinned up a satyr's thigh, hopped

According to Prof. W. C. Bagley, of the Oswego State Normal, N. Y., the results we should get from our course of study are: Habit, knowledge, attitudes and perspectives, ideals, taste and prejudices, interests, habits of method, and prejudices in favor of certain habits. Therefore, in judging successful teachers we must analyze their mental makeup with a view to discovering the habits, the knowledge, the attitudes and perspectives, the ideals, the taste and prejudices, the interests, the habits of method, and the prejudices in favor of habits which make most effectively for efficient teaching.

Microbes in Your Scalp

Authorities say that a microbe causes baldness. If you are losing hair try our remedy at our risk.

Professor Unna, of Germany, and Dr. Sabouraud, the great French Dermatologist, claim that a microbe causes baldness, and their theory has been verified by earliest scientific tests. This microbe destroys the hair follicles, in time causing the scalp pores to close and the scalp to become shiny. Thus it is believed nothing will revive the growth. If treated before this occurs, baldness may be overcome.

We know of nothing that has given such universal satisfaction in treating the scalp and hair as Rezall "93" Hair Tonic. It has been designed after long study to overcome the cause of falling hair as discovered by Prof. Unna, Dr. Sabouraud and other scalp and hair specialists, and we believe it will do more than anything else can to remove dandruff and stop falling hair, and if any human agency can promote a new growth of hair it will do that, too.

We want you to make us prove it. We will pay for a month's treatment of Rezall "93" Hair Tonic used during a trial, if you will use it according to directions, and are not thoroughly satisfied. When we will do this, you surely should not hesitate to at least try it.

Start the treatment today. Your mere request will get your money back if you want it. Two sizes: 50c and $1.00.

You can buy Rezall "93" Hair Tonic in this community only at our store:

TWO GEORGE WASHINGTONS

MRS. WASHINGTON'S FAVORITE PICTURE

How many people would recognize George Washington if they met him face to face and modernly dressed on a city street?

How many school children, coming directly from the exercises celebrating the birthday of the father of our country, would recognize the immortal Washington if he stood on the schoolhouse steps and gave them greeting as they went out?

"Every one," answers the public. "Not one," say experts in Washington. The public, secure in its knowledge of the portraits accepted as portraying the features of Washington, is confident that it knows Washington too well to make any mistake. The historians, knowing of what the public is ignorant, calmly aver that not one American patriot in a thousand knows what the first president looked like in life. For the accepted picture of Washington, the famous Stuart portrait which has been handed down through the generations as being a lifelike representation of Washington's features, which has been reproduced hundreds of times, and from which Americans have learned to know, or think they know, what he looked like, has been exposed and held up to criticism and branded as everything but a resemblance of George Washington. The public, which for 119 years has looked upon this face depicted in books, magazines, on flags, everywhere that the face of the father of the country has been reproduced, never has seen a faithful representation of what Washington looked like in the flesh. Trusting little school children, gazing upon the classic countenance on the schoolroom wall, have been basely deceived. Washington did not look like that, or anything near it, it is said.

This picture, say the researchers, is far removed from the true Washington. The public, they say, doesn't know the father of the country and wouldn't recognize him if they met him face to face on the street.

The how and the why of this startling announcement comes through the disclosure of a real Washington, a portrait quite different from the accepted one. This portrait, painted by the great Washington painter, Stuart, in 1795, is declared to be the one that shows the man as he really was, depicting his features and characteristics with the sternest fidelity and truthfulness, and making a likeness so true that it should have been handed down through the ages as a record of what Washington looked like. It was accepted as such by Mrs. George Washington and by the entire household at Mount Vernon.

Surely, say the historians, his own wife and family ought to know what Washington looked like! But this portrait, the "true Washington," is not the one that the public has been led to believe is George Washington.

The commonly accepted portrait, the one which hangs in duplicate on the walls of every school-room in the land, and which Americans confidently point out as a picture of the father of their country, is quite another picture. It also was painted by Stuart, in 1795, but the magic bond that had made the painter and subject at ease with each other was gone, and Stuart turned from his work in disgust, declaring that the picture lacked the animation that characterized Washington, and was never completed.

Yet this is the picture which has been accepted as an absolutely correct. Mrs. Washington didn't like it; but the public and Washington's old soldiers liked it. It was their idea of what they wanted their hero to look like. Hence its rapid growth into popularity, and the practical eclipse of the other portrait, declared to be the true Washington.

Stuart, it is well known, made three great attempts to transfer the being of Washington to canvas. The first was, so the painter declared, a failure, because the confidence necessary between subject and artist was lacking. The second was a success. Stuart learned that he could get his famous sitter interested in "stalking horses," and so he painted him as he really was. The third attempt resulted in the conventional "household Washingtons." It lacked, said Mrs. Washington, truth. He looked, said Stuart, the antithesis of the general. But it made the country's own father.

different artists, a full dozen of statues, and hundreds of pen and shadow pictures are in the collection of Washington faces now scattered throughout the libraries, museums, and private collections of this country," writes Dr. Bernard J. Kilrand, director of the Chicago public library. "Besides these varied originals have been the foundation of many hundreds of famous copies, not counting the nearly 400 different engravings formed from these sketches from life—in all making the largest assortment of likenesses made of any human being and representing the progress of the art of painting and sculpture, as well as engraving, since the year 1772 down to this present day.

The entire time which he must have spent before the critical eyes of these famous artists, if summed up, would doubtless reach at least a full month, and while his personality has been caught in its great varieties of moods, yet the complex physiognomy has been deduced to five basic faces which are standard as relates to age, character and physical formation.

The first among these Washington faces is the one produced by Charles Wilson Peale, who at the invitation of Washington called at Mount Vernon and painted the first portrait of the eminent Virginian; this was begun on May 20, 1772, when Washington was 40 years of age. This picture is especially interesting since it is the earliest reproduction of the face and form of Washington. He paid Peale about $100, and during the remainder of his career Peale painted eight more from life, the dates being 1772, '77, '79, '84, '85, '87, '94, and '95. These studies are practically all recognized as worthy of the artist and the man.

"The war for independence was just ended and the treaty of peace signed when the state of Virginia engaged in the discussion as to how it could best fitly recognize the public service of Washington, one of its native and loyal sons. After a variety of propositions had been disposed of the legislature finally voted that a statue of him should be erected in his honor.

"Benjamin Harrison was the governor at the time and was personally entrusted by the legislature to execute the wishes of the resolution. He immediately wrote to Franklin and Jefferson, who were in Paris, to engage the best sculptor of all Europe; the governor also called attention to the fact that he had ordered Mr. Peale to make a full-sized painting of the general, and this he would forward as a model for the sculptor. Franklin and Jefferson were not long in selecting the artist. He was a Frenchman by the name of Jean Antoine Houdon.

"When he was informed of the oil painting project he immediately objected, saying that if Virginia wanted a living likeness of Washington he must have his own way as to arriving at the product; that would mean that he must cross the Atlantic, visit with Washington, and carefully model the face from the living, take impressions and casts, and laboring along exact rather than impressional lines. This was quickly agreed to by Franklin and Jefferson, but the terms of the affair were difficult to arrange.

"The short, industrious artist was in no great hurry to leave for Paris for the wilds of Virginia, and between illness and rush of work it was about one year before he set sail. He perchance came across with Franklin, who, on arriving, wrote a letter of introduction to Washington.

"The Houdon statue has been accepted as the nearest true physical reproduction we possess of the great commander, even Peale and the critical Stuart admit this, and the Virginians never grow tired of what Stuart said: "It is the head of Washington par excellence." Additional testimony of the truthfulness of the Houdon statue dates to 1860 (Feb. 22), when the congressional committee, after diligent and lengthy discussion, accepted it as the standard Washington for busts, medals and coins.

"The military Washington we get in the John Trumbull picture, which has caught the daring and dashing element of the war general. Trumbull did everything with the greatest possible exactness, and every detail in the painting is from life and from nature. The horse and the background are the result of standings and poses and represent a world of detail. When it was completed in 1790 Washington was in New York and the executive mansion was the scene of an interesting pictorial arrangement at the summering of Washington. A large delegation of Indian chiefs were visiting him and, anxious to see what they thought of the picture, he had the artist set it in a large room opposite the entrance and so arranged as to give it a panoramic setting. Then he had the artist take the Indians through and, to the amazement of the general, who was undoubtedly Washington, and only after they were allowed to go forth and examine it did they desist in paying homage to the painting.

"The Trumbull picture is indeed a great production, and while it has always been recognized as the military spirit, strange to say the portrait remained ungraced for nearly a century—the first time it was illustrated in 1882.

"The last picture made from life was the work of the Frenchman, Charles B. Momin. He was the inventor of the physionotrace, by which, through mechanical arrangement, the accurate shape of the head and the outlines of the face were registered, and the artist only supplied the life or human touch. The original is lost, but a good copy remains. It is pronounced, a good Washington and is famous because of it being the last likeness."

YOU WHO HAVE TEMPERAMENT

Make Sure It Isn't Ill Temper, Egotism, or Worse, Selfishness.

Temperament, as applied to individual peculiarities, was a word not in the old-fashioned family vocabulary. Helen Coale Crew, writing in Lippincott, comments:

"Time was—and that not many decades ago—when we all had temperament of one sort or another. I might have a gloomy temperament, you a genial one, our friend a phlegmatic one, and the kindest, simplest soul among us was as temperamental as his nervous and complex brother. Nowadays we apply the word to put a single class of individuals, and the test of temperament seems to be that a man shall always do the unexpected, and shall be extremely difficult to live with. And as in Attic days there were but Greeks and barbarians, today there are but the temperamental and the commonplace.

"Fortunately, an overwhelming proportion of us are commonplace; for no family could, with pride and difficulty, support more than one temperamental member. It is the commonplace who bear the brunt of living, offering themselves as buffers between those favored creatures of temperament and the daily friction of family life. We must needs be tender of them, for it is of them that geniuses are made. 'Be careful of Edward's feelings,' is the constant warning of an anxious mother. 'He has so much temperament' and is so sensitive.' And Edward continues to go about with his ill-balanced chip on his shoulder, which his brothers and sisters dare not knock off, though among themselves they are well aware that knocking about is what he needs above all else.

"If every individual of temperament became a full-fledged genius, no amount of forbearance would seem too great a price to pay on the part of the parents. Unfortunately, many fall just enough short of this desired culmination to keep us in doubt all the time. And he who falls short of ripening into the genius he has for years expected to be is likely not to ripen in any direction, but to harden into a disappointed, exacting creature, needing a still larger and more devoted group of buffers to save his tender mental shins.

"At the risk of even losing a few geniuses out of the world, would it not be better to turn over all temperamental children to their commonplace brothers and sisters without reservation? Children are wise creatures, even the dullest of them. They will replace the aggressive chips upon Edward's shoulder with the burden that belongs there—that of serving as he would be served and enduring as he would be endured. And if, with this fair play all around, he blossoms into a genius, we are only too thankful to rise up and call him blessed!"

Concluded.
Host—Mr. Parvett, you'll please take Miss Gummell out to dinner.
Mr. Parvett—Certainly, but where? I thought we were going to eat here in the house!—Judge

BOYS' HANDICRAFT

By A. NEELY HALL

Author of "Handicraft for Handy Boys" and "The Boy Craftsman"

A HOME-MADE WHEELBARROW.

This is not a toy wheelbarrow, but one designed for practical purposes. Every boy who has work to do about the lawn and garden will do well to provide himself with a similar barrow, for it will save him a good deal of carrying. The model from which the working drawings were prepared was made in less than an hour's time, so you see it was quite simple to construct.

An 11-inch cast iron grooved sheave, or pulley wheel, was used for the barrow wheel, and served the purpose excellently. One of these can usually be purchased at a hardware store. A wheel from a broken wagon may be used instead, but of course the narrowness of its rim makes it less desirable for running over soft soil. Lacking a wagon wheel, a third form of wheel that can be used is a home-made wooden one. To prepare this, cut two disks eleven or twelve inches in diameter, place them together so that the direction of the grain in one piece runs at right angles to that in the other, and fasten them securely with screws. Bore a five-eighths-inch hole through the center for the axle to run through.

Fig. 2 shows the completed framework of the wheelbarrow, and Fig. 3 shows a plan view of the under side of the framework with the principal dimensions for cutting and assembling the different members.

DETAIL OF WHEELBARROW BOX.

The handle bars A can be prepared by ripping a four-foot-length of a piece of 2x4 in half, which will make them about 1 1/2 inch thick by 1 1/2 inches wide. On the handle ends of the bars, round off the edges for a distance of about 12 inches, using a draw-knife, plane or jack-knife for the purpose.

The blocks B (Figs. 2, 3 and 4) support the ends of the wheel axle (D, Fig. 4), and are nailed to bars A. One side of each should be cut to the angle at which bars A are set, so the opposite face will be parallel to the wheel (Fig. 3). To get the correct angle, place the two bars upon the floor with the ends the distances apart shown in Fig. 3; then you can easily find what the measurements for the blocks should be. Bore a hole through each block about one inch from the bow end for the axle to fit in. The axle may be a piece of iron rod, or an iron bolt, six inches long and of a trifle smaller diameter than the hole in the center of the wheel. The washers C (Figs. 3 and 4) are used to fill up the space between the wheel and blocks B, and are cut out of wood.

The wheel must be fastened in place before the connecting strips E, F and G are fastened to bars A, and in doing this care must be taken to center the wheel; that is, it must be placed so as to line up with the center of the space between the handle ends. If blocks B are made of identical shape and size, with the axle hole bored correctly, there will be no difficulty; but as there may be a little variance in these it is a good plan to assemble all the parts temporarily, first, and find out whether they fit properly.

Fasten the connecting strip E to the axle 9 inches from the forward end, strip G at a distance away equal to the length of the barrow box, which should be about 24 inches, and strip F 1 1/2 inches from G. If it is desired to use strips that are 1/2 inch longer than the axle, nail them in place; if they are of their own ends flush with the sides of bars A.

Fig. 5 shows the detail of the legs. Cut the short uprights H 9 inches long by 1 1/2 inches wide by 1/2 inches thick, and fasten them together with the crosspiece I, which should be of the proper length so the legs will set against bars A, between strips F and G (Fig. 3). The ends may be trimmed off on one side so they will fit the angle of the bars, but a small triangular wedge may be driven in to fill the space instead. Nail the leg ends to the handle bars.

A grocery box about 9 inches deep 18 inches wide and 24 inches long should be procured for the box of the wheelbarrow. Re-nail any boards that show signs of coming loose; then, to increase the height of the box at the front, cut a piece of 8-inch board equal in length to the inside width of the box (J, Fig. 6), and by means of two battens (K) fasten it in place as shown in Fig. 1.

Remove the paper labels from the box, then apply a coat of paint to all parts.

TRAMP'S ONE GREAT LONGING

Not Food, or Even Drink, but Just That Second-Hand Volume as Ragged as Himself.

"He was the latest specimen of the race of tramps," said the gray-headed man. "Other tramps I have met have asked me to buy nearly everything for them from a drink to a ticket to Europe, but this tramp asked me to buy a book. The literary beggar stood at my elbow outside a second-hand book store. He was pretty ragged and pretty dirty, but he had a mind above rags and dirt. On the table before us lay 'The Crime of Sylvestre Bonnard,' in French.

"'Oh, Anatole France,' said my beggar, with a kind of gasp. 'Buy it for me, mister, won't you?'

"I was not in a mood for conferring favors. I shook my head. My tramp picked up the book. They were a good match, one as ragged and soiled as the other. He read a passage aloud.

"'Oh, the dear old innocent,' he said. 'Buy it for me, mister, won't you? Only ten cents.'

"I did not know Sylvestre Bonnard and I did not know French, but I did know that that man's particular need on earth just then was the book, and I bought it."

Principles.

"People's principles," says an Atlantic contributor, "never have quite the influence we might expect them to have. Principles are nothing in themselves. They have to be held by particular persons and they are held in all sorts of ways. Some carry their principles as certain folk do horse-chestnuts—in their pockets, as a specific against disease—and then go along much as if they were not there. Others wear them like a garment; but there are, proverbially, many ways of wearing the toga. Others again give their principles a more intimate reception. But in such intimacy the influences are reciprocal; often by the time a principle has percolated through a temperament it would not know its own countenance."

The Carp.

More than thirty pounds of German carp in one fish has been taken out of Quasnapowitt lake, in Wakefield. That is said to be the biggest fish caught in Massachusetts fresh water, though many carp are large. They eat only vegetable diet, science says, and do not bother the usual bait. The big carp would attract attention in other lakes of this state. Millions of them would help to reduce the cost of fish food. Possibly there is not enough sport in landing a thirty-pound fish from a lake. But it looks more like thrif than angling for minnows.—Worcester Telegram.

HOW MRS. BROWN SUFFERED

During Change of Life—How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Her a Well Woman.

Iola, Kansas.—"During the Change of Life I was sick for two years. Before I took your medicine I could not bear the weight of my clothes and was bloated very badly. I doctored with three doctors but they did me no good. They said nature must have its way. My sister advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I purchased a bottle. Before it was gone the bloating left me and I was not so sore. I continued taking it until I had taken twelve bottles. Now I am stronger than I have been for years and can do all my work, even the washing. Your medicine is worth its weight in gold. I cannot praise it enough. If more women would take your medicine there would be more healthy women. You may use this letter for the good of others."—Mrs. D. H. BROWN, 809 N. Walnut St., Iola, Kan.

Change of Life is one of the most critical periods of a woman's existence. Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

REFUSING A CROWN.

Manager—Say, I want a super to take the part of a king. You'll get 65 cents a performance.

Applicant—Sorry, boss, but I can't assume the affairs of a state for anything like that amount.

Flattery.

Visitor—So he trimmed the people here out of thousands of dollars? He must have been smooth. How did he do it?

Native—Simply by addressing every Democrat in town, in an apparently absent way, as "postmaster."—Pack.

AS TO FLAVOUR.

Found Her Favorite Again.

A bright young lady tells how she came to be acutely sensitive as to the taste of coffee:

"My health had been very poor for several years," she says. "I loved coffee and drank it for breakfast, but only learned by accident, as it were, that it was the cause of the constant, dreadful headaches from which I suffered every day, and of the nervousness that drove sleep from my pillow and so deranged my stomach that everything I ate gave me acute pain. (Tea is just as injurious, because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.)"

"My condition finally got so serious that I was advised by my doctor to go to a hospital. There they gave me what I supposed was coffee, but I thought it was the best I ever drank. But I have since learned it was Postum. I gained rapidly and returned home in four weeks.

"Somewhere the coffee was used in home didn't taste right when I got back. I tried various kinds, but none tasted as good as that I drank in the hospital, and all brought back the dreadful headaches and the sleep-over feeling."

"One day I got a package of Postum, and the first taste of it I took, I said 'that's the good coffee we had in the hospital.' I have drunk it ever since, and I have never had a headache and feel better than I have for years. Name given to Postum: 'The Road to Wellville,' in plain 'There's a reason.' Postum now comes in concentrated powder form, called Instant Postum. It is prepared by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water, then sugar to taste, and enough cream to bring the color to golden brown.

Instant Postum is convenient; there's no waste, and the serving is always uniform. Sold by all grocers. To obtain the 10-cent, 25-cent and 50-cent.

A lady told me that her mother had been advised to take Postum and that she had done so, and that she had found it to be the best thing she had ever taken.

Says Stepson Shot

Him Twice

Washtenaw Farmer, Alleged to Have Assaulted Wife, to Hit in Arm and Hand.

Theodore Ash of Salem township, is in the hospital at Ann Arbor, with two wounds, one through an arm and the other through a hand.

Last August Ash was arrested on a serious charge sworn to by a step-daughter. Ash is out on bail.

After his release from jail he went back home to live, and three weeks ago his wife, caused his arrest for assault and battery. He was let off with payment of cost but was warned by the justice not to go on his wife's farm again.

Wednesday morning Mrs. Ash's 27-year-old son saw Ash in the barn, and rushed into the house, returning with a revolver. Ash alleged he fired twice in quick succession. Ash's own son was with him and after bandaging the old man's wounds as best he could, they drove to Plymouth and then took the interurban.

Unless blood poisoning sets in Ash will recover.

LOOK OUT FOR THE CARS

DO YOU know of anyone who is old enough to read, who has not seen that sign at a railroad crossing?

If everyone has seen it at some time or other, then why doesn't the railroad let the sign go away? Why does the railroad company continue to keep those signs at every crossing?

Maybe you think, Mr. Merchant, "Most everybody knows my store, I don't have to advertise."

Your store and your goods need more advertising than the railroad needs to warn people to "Look Out for the Cars."

Nothing is ever contemplated in the advertising world.

The Department Stores are a very good example—they are continually advertising—and they are continually doing a good business.

If it pays to run a few ads 'round about Christmas time, it certainly will pay you to run advertisements about all the time.

It's just business, that's all, so ADVERTISE IN THIS PAPER.
