Eighteen Million Bibles a Year

How Many Are Shut Up---Never Opened?

"Eighten millions of Bibles in one year," is the remarkable record made by the Bible societies and the publishing houses of the world during the past year which ended March 31st. At the recent meeting of the land Foreign Bible Society, in London, it was announced that the directation of the Bible during the past yee are exceeded that of any other year in the world's history. The Bible has now been translated, in whole or it into not less than six hundred languages and every year sight or ten new languages or dislects are added to truly, this is a wonderful advance in the spreading of God's Word. But we must not forget that many are sold every year that are never read. Perhaps someone, who received a Bible as a gift and yet never re will read these lines. If you have not read the Great Book you are the loser. On the other hand there are reading the Bible and being uplifted by its messages.

Next Sunday evening the pastor is going to take a trip around the world and tell of the great good done by the Bible as it has gone into different countries. These are true illustrations.

HOW FRANCE'S BLACK MEN FROM AFRICA FIGHT THEIR BATTLES

By PAUL SCOTT MOWRER.

Sy PAUL SCOTT MOWRER.

(Correspondent Chicago Dally Newa.)

Epernay, France.—There are two principal categories of foreign troops aghting side by side with the French to defend this lovely land—the British from across the channel and the Algarians, Moore and Senegalese from across the Mediterranean in Africa. Dozens of correspondents have followed the British expeditionary force to chant the heroism of Tommy Atkins. But though the exact figures are not available, I believe the French African troops now facing the Germans are about as numerous as Germans are about as numerous as the British—namely, in the neighborhood of 200,000. Somebody ought to chronicle their glories, too—some strolling poet of the Atlas, some black Yoodoo with an epic turn of mind. In the meantime I may be permitted to tell the little I have learned about them, as I have seen them in these old French towns and marching among the vineyards of Champagne. You may read in the Old Testament how David, after stunning Gollisth of Gath with a stone, cut off the giant's head and carried it back to exhibit in camp; or, how Joshua and his Israelites, on taking Jericho, "utterly destroyed all that was in the city, both man and women, young and old, or and sheep and ass with the edge of the sword." This was the ancient idea of warfare—not merely to defeat the enemy, but to exterminate him pions as trophies. It is the idea of the Turcos and Senegalese riflemen

Can't Change Nature Habits.

These Africans have by no means een able to shuffle off their native been able to shuffle off their native habits just because they have been brought to fight in the white man's battles. All of their officers are French. One of these officers confided to me that he often had "the greatest difficulty" in persuading the men to behave in a civilized manner toward prisoners and the enemy's wounded. Indeed, I abould say that "the greatest difficulty" is a cuphemism. Somewhere up near the Belgian frontier the advancing Germans found a barn with $2 wounded Turcos in it. They burked and dynamited the building just as it stood.

it. They burned and dynamited the building just as it stood.

Two Kinds of African Troops.

Roughly speaking, there are two sorts of French African troops—Turcos and Senegalese. Turco is a general name, covering Moors, Berber cavalry and Algerians, but properly applying only to the last, so called in the Crimean war by the Russians, who mistook them for Turks. The Turcos wear white or light blue bags yr trousers, light blue isackets and red They are recruited promiscu cusly among the various peoples ... habiting the North African coast, but habiting the North African coast, but all are Mohammedans, and in most of them Arab blood predominates. They wage war with the same fanatic fury which, in their forefathers, the Baracens, aroused the wonder of the Crusaders, and their specialty is the bayonet charge.

But the day of cold steel and the hand to hand fight, though by no means past, is gradually passing, as the Turces have found to their cost. A division of them was in the rear guard which covered the French retreat from Belgium. At Signyl'Abbaye they made a stand. The pursuing Germans halted in the fringe of a wood and presently the Turces, whom their officers were unable longer to ing termans naired in the fringe of a wood and presently the Turcos, whom their officers were unable longer to restrafi, charged with the bayonet. Over the stubble fields where the wheat still stood in the shock swept the long, brightly colored line—blue, red, white, brown—and the silver of smallight on polished metal. As they drew nearer to the foe they redoubled their shrill yells and began discharging their guns. Four hundred yards, 200 yards, 200 yards; Where were the Germane? Had the visible fury of the onelaught already frozen their hearts? At 100 yards a terrific fusiliade of rifies and quickfirers opened from the woods. The panting Turcos, undaunted, increased their speed, sure now of victory, when suddenly cos, undaunted, increased their speed, sure now of victory, when suddenly-barbed wire! The German had meshed the field with barbed wire. The Turcos were caught like files in the cruel web. Half of them returned. That, as far as I know, was the first and thus far the only great bayonet charge of the present war, though minor engagements of this nature have been frequent and effective.

"It was Writtan He Should Die."
It is curious how the oriental fatalfam of the men soon spreads to their occidental leaders. Last night in a quiet cafe of this town I was conversing with a sergeant of the Moroccan fusileers. He was a Frenchman of Lyons who had served four years in Algeria and two in Morocco
—a fine, brown-eyed, handsome fellow in his parey left him towned. low, in his baggy, light blue trousers, his jacket of the same color decked with yellow braid, his bright red sash and his cap like of ex without a tassel. His Moroccan campaigns, he said, were mere practical jokes to the present butchery, and he told me this story of the trenches, from which he had just returned:

"We have a hard time making the men stay down under cover. They want to see what is going on. They want to jump out and wave their guns and shout insults at the enemy occasionally as they used to in Morocco. Our captain, who was, of course, a Frenchman, was as had as any. Except to sleep, he absolutely refused to descend into the trenches. He would kneel for hours on the ground a little to the rear watching the enemy through his glasses and directing our fire. When we remonstrated with him he merely said like strated with him he merely said, like any Mohammedan, that a builet would find him when his time came—neither sooner nor later. But so many of our men paid for their temerity with their lives that he, too, finally consented to come down out of the hall of bullets which had never ceased about him. Yesterday was his first day in the trenches. About three o'clock in the attencon a shell burst overhead. A plece of it hit him on the crown and killed him instantly."
"So you think it was because his time had come?"
"What else can one think? He had found safety in the midst of death.

I do not know the origin of the proverb, "All's fair in love and war."

but it has an ancient, oriental savor and I suspect the Turcos thoroughly subscribe fo it. These African fighters are the only ones among the allies whom I have heard speak openly in praise of German ruses. "They're sly ones!" say the Turcos, and wag their brown heads and grin appreciation. They think it a very good scheme of the Germans not to make any effort to bury their dead before retreating from one position to another, for thus the pursuing enemy must either bother to do the job himself or else run the risk of discomfort. self or else run the risk of discomfor and even disease. They especially admire the German trick of standing up their dead, helmet on and gun in hand, along a deserted trench, so that the French will think the trench is still defended. And the wonder to them is, not that the Germans have burned and shelled towns, but that they have not done so more frequentive.

Knowing that the forefathers of many of our own good American negroes had been captured by English and Portuguese slavers in precisely these regions, I expected to find something familiar in the aspect of the Senegalese riflemen. I was destined to disillusion. Three days ago on the road to Reims, I overtook an entire regiment. They stood or squatted or sprawled for several hundred yards along the grass at the edge of the winding road, resting under the poplars, their rifles stacked, their white officers withdrawn into groups, always at some distance from the menlars, their rifles stacked, their white officers withdrawn into groups, always at some distance from the men. Save for a red sash under their tunics, they were uniformed entirely in dark blue, even to their cloth caps and their putties. I walked past them slowly, fascinated. The French war ministry is informed that the German losses in the north in the last few cays have beer 50,000, a Paris dispatch says. After an engagement at a single point on the Yser the Germans left 2,000 dead on the field. The French casualties in this engagement were reported to be 115 killed and wounded.

The British war office made no announcement to contradict the German claim of advantage in the fighting about Ypres, but admitted that the ailies had been forced to evacuate part of the village of Messines in the face of a vigorous German attack.

In Beigium the German attacks were particularly desperate in character in the region between Dixmude and the Lys, but in spite of 'the vigor of these assaults the allies were ably to make a slight advance along the entire front. Would Be Eleven Powers at War.

OF MOTHERHOOD

The experience of Motherhood the tying one to most women and marks distinctly an epoch in their lives. Not onewoman in a hundred is prepared or understands how to properly care for herself. Of course nearly every woman nowadays has medical treatment at such times, but many approach the experience with an organism unfitted for thetrial of strength, and when it is over her system has received a shock from which it is hard to recover. Following right upon this comes the nervous stream

There is nothing more charming them a happy and healthy mother of children, and indeed child-birth under the right conditions need be no hazard to health or beauty. The unexplainable thing is that, with all the evidence of shattered nerves and broken health resulting from an unprepared condition, and with ample time in which to prepare, women will persist in going blindly to the trial.

Every woman at this time should rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism.

WHAT THE VITAMINES TEACH US

VITAMINE FOODS.

The fundamental difference between plants and animals is in their methods of feeding. Plants are essentially constructive and work up for themselves the simplest inorganic elements into food. Animals, on the other hand, are essentially destructive and can make use of these same elements only by destroying the combinations arranged by the plants and recombining and excreting them in such forms as are absolutely useless for animal food urkil they are once more worked up by the plants. All the carbohydrates, the starches and sugars, all the nitrogen compounds and the proteins, are ultimately provided for the whole animal world by the plant world. Obviously, we have here a cycle analogous to cycles to be found everywhere throughout nature, from which we may—but seemingly will not—learn. In this cycle the animal is found to be parasitic and man is about the most hopelessly parasitic of all, because his sublime egotism blinds him to the fact that he is but a single link in an incomprehensible chain of universal life.

In our ignorance we have presumed to interfere with nature's plans, with dire results, and only very recently have we generally begun to suspect that the key to the solution of our serious ills, both physical and social, and covering disease, poverty and crime, is to be found in a comprehension of the subject of nutrition. Very obviously, then, the study of nutrition is worth while and must begin at the foundation, with the breathing and drinking of plants and their reactions to light, heat and gravitation.

Eykeman in 1892 called attention to a peculiar relationship between beri-contains of plants and their reactions to light, heat and gravitation.

Eykeman in 1892 called attention to a peculiar relationship between berivari and polished rice, and he followed tup from time to time for some four-son-years. Gryna joined in the quest n 1910, and in 1911 Fraser and Stan-con quite definitely proved that the porticle layer of rice contains a substance which cures beri-beri in man and the polyneuritis that is produced n birds by feeding them on polished te. Then Casimir Funk in 1911 isoated from the material ground from he surface of rice in polishing it a definite crystalline body with which he ured polyneuritis induced in pigeons ty feeding them on ordinary polished ice.

erals, and besides they contain the newly discovered vitamines. The vitamines are nitrogenous bodies of highly complex structure and no diet is complete without them. Vitamines are found in plants, and especially in their seeds. So far as is known at present, animals are incapable of making them and obtain them only by feeding on plants. Vitamines occur in meat, fresh milk and in the yolks of eggs. They are found in whole grains, potatoes, carrots, beans, peas, lentils and the like; also in lime and in other fresh fruit fuices.

Wherever any cereal robbed of its colored aleutone or vitamine layer forms the chief food of a people, there a dediciency disease appears. The chief increase of bert-bert, caused by eating polished rice and resulting in thousands of deaths annually in Japan and other countries, coincides with the replacement of the primitive stone grinding by the modern steel roller process. The stone mills ground the entire grain; the modern rolls enable the miller to replaced from the estarch.

WHAT THE VITAMINES TEACH US.

"We have done much to drive down the death rate in the way of bettering sanitation and such things, but in spite of all this our death rate for persons over forty is increasing," writes Dr. Charles F. Bolduan, director of the New York health department's bureau of public health. And attention is called to the fact that overindulgence in proteins (meats, eggs, fish and the like) is a big factor in this increase in the death rate of persons over forty years of age.

Such statements are frequently selzed with avidity by persons of more than average intelligence and passed from individual to individual, slightly embellished with each repetition, until they may become strong indersements of one or more of the many so-called diet systems that every so often sweep over the country leaving a trail of invalids in their wake. It must be remembered that any marked change in diet or in cooking is certain to produce some result, and change itself is often a benefit; but a diet which admirably suits one person who lives in a certain location and does a certain kind of work may not be adapted to another individual living under different conditions and doing a different kind of work. The truth of the matter is that man's chances of health are best when he eats with moderation a diet made up of clean, wholesome, ordinary foods, well prepared in the usual ways. Such a diet should include some articles to be cooked and others to be eaten raw, such as bread cereals, fruits, vegetables, meat, fish, milk, butter, cheese and eggs. All these articles should be of good quality and free from all dirt, either visible or invisible, should contain no adulterations.

Apart from overeating of proteins probably the greater part of our troubles come.

ble or invisible, should combain adulterations.

Apart from overeating of proteins probably the greater part of our troubles comes from the loss of important elements from our foods in preparing or preserving them. These losses have been due to the fact that either we do not know the elements are present or we assume the very minute quantities to be of no consequence. We are only just beginning to grasp the real truth through a study of the enzymes, the catalyzers, the vitamines, the hormones and the action of the ductless glands in the body. This world is adjusted to operate un-

Ti knew of a man who was so apprehensive of the dangers to come that he gave up his job rather than remain the constant martyr of his thoughts. The nearest I ever came to seeing this faculty of foreseeing was shown on a run I had in 1900 over a road in Illituois. I was engineer of a fast passenger train that went out of Jefferson every night at 11:45 to make connections with one of the trunk lines. The road was not much used at that time and we were able to maintain a very fast speed.

"We were not more than about three miles out from the city when my freman, a boy of about twenty-three, rushed from the coal bin and, grasping the levers, bore down on them with all his weight, and with a mighty heaving and tugging, which almost caused him to fall down backward brought the train to a stop.

Ti was just in the nick of time and was an act that was instrumental in saving the lives of the passengers on the train. About half a mile ahead of us the cub had seen a fage of fire on the track—that was all. But his intuition, or whatever you choose to call it, had told him that it was a locomotive, and this it proved to be.

"Luckily it had stopped before we had, but had he not thrown on the levers a collision would have resulted.

"We both of us stepped down from the cab, walked down the track toward the engine, which was on the same track as our train, and found that, although no one was in the cab at the time, someone had but shortly before been there. The lever was reversed and the fires were still burning.

"However, there was no light over the pilot, nor did our signals show that there was anything on the track. The order had read 'clear shead' when we had received it at the station.

"To run the engine as well as our train salot was but the decision of a moment, and while I took back the train Bill Strawk followed with the engine. At the roundhouse of the nearest station there was excitement when we arrived. The engine had been missed and the officials had been fearful of an accident.

"It turned out later that the e

"A drummer on this train—this happened years ago—said pleasantly to the conductor:
"'We're going to be late, friend.'
"'No, said the conductor in-surly tones; 'no, we ain't going to be late, neither.'

Unique Engineering Feat.
When railroad building was undertaken in Alaska, following the discovery of gold, one of the most unique engineering feats on record was performed. At a point 80 miles out of Skagway the suryey bad been made for the road along the shore of a lake, but it was found to be so irregular and broken by so many coves that the plan was adopted of getting a better line by lowering the level of the lake. This was done by cutting an outlet channel, through which 14 feet of the lake drained off. But presently the new channel, having been cut through a sandy hill, gave way, and the escaping lake water wore an enormous canyon through the country and reduced the lake level again over seventy feet. A fine, level roadbed was secured over what was formerly the bed of the lake.

Vegetable Puree, Liked by Everybody.

Any vegetable puree can be prepared as follows: Melt one ounce of well clarified dripping in a pan and cook in it till tender, but without coloring, four ounces of onlons, two ounces of celery and a bunch of herbs; then in five minutes lay in one pound of potatoes, carrots, turnips, etc., according to what you wish to use, peeled and cut up; cover down the pan and let it continue to cook for twelve to fifteen minutes longer, shaking the pan now and again to prevent the vegetables burning; then add a quart of liquid, with a few peppercorns and seasoning, and let it all simmer till tender (for about one and a half hours), then rub it through the sieve, reheat, add a mixture of flour and milk and use. For the mixture rub a little flour, say a desaert-appoonful, smooth with some cold milk, water or stock, then add this to the soup and let it all cook for five minutes longer.

Aunt Neille's Pudding.

Flour, one cupful (half pound); salt, one pinch; chopped suct, one cupful (half pound); candled peel, a few strips; one egg; molasses, one cup; rind and juice of one-half lemon; milk enough to moisten.

Mix all the dry ingredients, make into a light paste with the egg, molasses and lemon juice, adding the milk, if necessary. Steam for two hours.

Pineappie Saiad.

Cut a ripe, mellow pineappie into silices, pare each silice and remove the eyes. Sprinkle lightly with sugar and allow to stand a few hours to extract the juice. Drain and to the silices add one-half as much grapefruit, tart apple or seeded Malaga grapes. Arrange on lettuce leaves. Dress with mayonnaise and decorate with halved grapes or candied cherries. Battle on an Engine.

To battle fiercely in the swaying cab of a speeding locomotive is something which does not come under the head of Parlor Amendments. Photoplayers who attempt this feat must possess "scalegs," and some amount of nerve. The players in the company directed by J. P. McGowan are so thoroughly at home in anything which smacks of the railroad that such feats are regarded as being nothing extraordinary. "The Demon of the Rails," Kalem's newest railroad drama, shows such a battle. Helen Holmes, the lovable actress, enacts an important role in this production and the part she plays in preventing a frightful railroad wreck will enthall the photoplay patrons who see this drama when it is released.

These are delicious.

Salad Oils.

A decided salad oil economy is obtained by mixing with a quart of the pure cottonseed oil, a few ounces of pure oil re oil for imparting richness of flavoring. The nutritive qualities of the two are about the same, and to some persons this mixture is more appetizing than the rather pungent flavor of the plain olive oil.

> Democrats Win First Place On Ticket But Lose Balance

REPUBLICANS WILL HAVE ELEVEN CONGRESSMEN

Detroit—The main contest of state interest in the election Tuesday, the race for governor between Woodbridge N. Ferris, democrat, present incumbent, and Chase S. Osborn; republican, resulted in a victory for the former by a substantial majority. The balance of the state offices, however, were won by the republican nominees. The vote for Pattengill, progressive, was so small as to be very disappointing to the members of that party. Early returns indicate that the legislature will be strongly republican. The returns indicate that Osborn was scratched by about one-fourth of the republican voters.

The counties in which Ferris received his largest pluralities, outside of Wayne, were Calhoun. Genesee, Houghton, Ingham, Jackson, Lenawee, Macomb, Oakland, Saginaw and Washtenaw. Most of these counties went democratic two years ago.

Osborn carried his own county of Chippewa by nearly 1,000, and came within a couple of hundred of carrying Ferris' county, Mecosta.

Of the 15 counties in the upper peninsula, Ferris has carried Luce. Mackinac, Menominee, Alger, Houghton, Ontonagon, and Osborn Marquette, Iron, Gogebic, Dickinson, Delta, Chippewa and Baraga.

The republican candidates for congress in ten of the eleven districts outside of Wayne county appear to be elected. In the second district Beakes and Bacon were running close together, but in districts 3 to 12, inclusive, the republican candidates were successful by large majorities. The two present progressive congressmen, Woodruff in the tenth and McDonald in the twelfth, are defeated, by George A. Loud and W. Frank James respectively.

All the World Leves 2—1!

Every great man has run away at least once in his lifetime, and some have done the trick oftener. The world loves a man who runs away—as a strategic move, mind you—and makes as good apologies for him as did Fall staff. If Horace had not fled from Philippi, Mahomet from Mecca. Dante from Florence, Shakespeare from Stratford, I doubt that we should still be hearing so much about them. Each had good reasons for going, but was too wise to stop and explain why—lest the goesips have their greess!

I hope I am too modest to offer my—self as a conspicuous exception—self as a c

It doesn't do any good to "kick" about the increasing cost of coal and other fuel.

The only thing to do is to figure how to burn less.

If you are using an old stove that has seen better days, the hances are you are wasting a good many buckets of coal each reek—nearly enough in a month or so to pay for a new, up-to-atte stove—a "Garland" heater or base burner.

date stove—a "Garland" heater or base burner.
You may not realize what a tremendous difference there is in fuel or sumed by different stoves.
We ourselves would perhaps never have known it, were we not it oughly familiar with the inside construction of every stove on the mar Now, after years of investigation, we found that "Garland" Stoves and Ranges burn considerably less fuel than others.
And it you will just step inside our store a moment, we will show you the fuel-saving construction of these celebrated stoves.
Moreover, we will show you the handsomest heaters, base burners, ranges and cookstoves you ever saw.

Methods of Feed Grinding

The grinding of grain has been of vital importance to man and beast ever since humanity discovered its nutritious value. In ancient times grinding was more of a crushing process, done by hand with crude shaped stones. In Bible times women did most of the grinding. The Indians by their methods simplified this laborious work to a certain extent. Finally came the old-fashioned grist mill—then followed other improvements. As asual, great creations come when the world needs them most and the

SYNOPSIS.

Than impulse broke through the restraint that seemed to characterize the Lanstron of thirty-five. The Lanstron of twenty-five, who had met catastrophe because he was "woolgathering," asserted himself. He put his hand on Stransky's shoulder. It was a strong though slim hand that looked as if it had been trained to do the work of two hands in the process of its owner's own transformation. Thus the old sergeant had seen a general remonstrate with a brave veteran who had been guilty of had conduct in subversion of the dignity of rank But young Dellarme, watching with eager curiosity, was sensible of no familiarity in the act. It all depended on how such a thing was done, he was thinking.

"We all have minutes when we are more or less anarchists," said Lan-stron in the human appeal of one man stron in the human appeal of one man to another. "But we don't want to be judged by one of those minutes. I got a hand mashed up for a mistake that took only a second. Think this over tonight before you act. Then, if you are of the same opinion, go to the colone and tell him so. Come, why not?" f"All right, sir, you're so decent about it!" grumbled Stransky, taking his place in the ranks.

Hep-hep-hep! The regiment started on its way, with Grandfather Fragini keeping at his grandson's side.

Hep-hep-hep! The regiment started on its way, with Grandfather Fragini keeping at his grandson's side.

"Makes me feel young again, but it's darned solemn beride the Hussars, with their horses bits a-fingling. Times have certainly changed-officers' kands in their pockets, saying 'if you don't mind' to a man that's insulted the flag! Kicking ain't good enough for that traitor! Ought to hang himyes, sir, hang and draw him!"

Lanstron watched the marching column for a time.

"Hep-hep-hep! It's the brown of the hinfantry that counts in the $ad," he "Hop-hep-hep! It's the brown of the Infantry that counts in the $nd," he numsed. "I liked that wall-eyed giant. He's all man!"

Then his livening giance swept the heavens inquiringly. A speck in the blue, far away in the realme of atmospheric infinity, kept growing in size until it took the form of the wings with which man files. The plane volplaned down with steady swittness, till its racing shadow lay large over the landscape for a few seconds before it rose again with beautiful ease and precision.

for you, Etzel!" Lanstron "Bully for you, Etzel!" Lanstron thought, as he started back to the aeroplane station. "You belong in the corps. We shall not let you return to your regiment for a while. You've a cool head and you'd charge a church tower if that were the orders."

A Sunday Morning Call. boy, Arthur Lanstron had per As a boy, Arthur Lanstron had persisted in being an exception to the indusces of both heredity and environment. Though his father and both transfathers were officers who believed theirs to be the true gentleman's protession, he had preferred any kind of mechanical toy to arranging the most gayly painted tin soliers in 'formation on the nursery floor; and he would rather read about the wonders of natural history and electricity than the campaigns of Napoleon and Frederick the Great and my Lord Nelson. Left to his own choice, he would miss the purade of the garrison for inspection by an excellency in order to ask questions of callency in order to ask questions of man wiping the oil of his hands with cotton-waste, who was far more enter-taining to him than the most spick-and-span ramrod of a sergeant.

Upon being told one day that he was to ga to the military school the following satumn, he broke out in open re-

"Why?" asked his father, thinking that when the boy had to give his ressons he would soon be argued out of

Now, if you manufacture smething, why, you see wool come of cloth, steal come out an automodia. If you build a bridge you see it rising little by little. You're getting your results every day; you see your halstakes and your successes. You're making something, creating something; creating something; then's something going on all the while that isn't guesswork. I think that's what I want to say. You won't order me to be a soldier, will goe!

results, had to earn them. He real ized in practice the truth of Partow's saying that there was nothing he had ever learned but what could be of service to him as an officer.

"Finding enough work to do?" Par-tow would ask with a chuckle when they met in these days; for he had made Lanstron both chief of intelligence and chief aerostatic officer. Young Colonel Lanstron's was the duty of gaining the secrets of the Gray staff and keeping those of the Brown and organizing up-to-the-moment effi-ciency in the new forces of the air.

Receiving no answer, he retraced his steps and seated himself on the second terrace in a secluded spot in the shadow of the first terrace wail, where he could see anyone coming up the main flight of steps from the road. When Marta walked she usually came from town by that way. At length the sound of a slow step from another direction broke on his ear. Some one was approaching along the path that ran at his feet. Around the corner of the wall, in his workman's Sunday-clothes of black, but wearing his old straw hat, appeared Feller, the gardener. He paused to examine a rose bush and Lanstron regarded him thoughtfully.

As he turned away he looked up, and a glance of definite and unfaltering recognition was exchanged between the two men. They had the garden to themselves.

"Gustave!" Lanstron exclaimed under his breath.

"Lanny!" exclaimed the gardener, turning over a branch of the rose bush. He seemed unwilling to risk talking openly with Lanstron.

"You look the good workman in his Sunday best to a T!" said Lanstron. He had remarked truly enough that the injury to his left hand served as wool-gathering than a string, even a large red atring, tled around his fin-ger. Thanks to skillful surgery, the fingers, incapable of spreading were yet serviceable and had a firm grip of the wheel as he rose from the eroplane station on the Sunday morning after Marta's return home for a flight to La Tir.

He knew the pattern weaving under his feet as one knows that of his own garden from an overlooking window. Every detail of the staff map, ravines, roads, buildings, battery positions, was stitched together in the flowing reality of actual vision. No white posts were necessary to tell him where the boundary between the two nations lay. The line was drawn in his brain.

Now that Lanstron was the organ izer of the aviation corps his own flights were rare. Mostly they were made to La Tir. His visits to Marta made to La Tir. He visits to Marta were his holidays. All the time that she was absent on her journey around the world they had corresponded. Her letters, so revealing of herself and her peculiar angles of observation, formed a bundle sacredly preserved. Her mother's joking reference about her girlish resolution not to marry a solider often recurred to him. There, he sometimes thought, was the real obstacle to his great desire.

When he alighted from the plane he thrust his left hand into his blouse pocket. He always carried it there, as, if it were literally sewn in place. In moments of emotion the scarred nerves would twitch as the telltale of his sensitiveness; and this was something he would conceal from others no matter how conscious he was of it himself. He found the Galland veranda self. He found the Galland veranda deserted. In response to his ring a maid came to the open door. Her face was sad, with a beauty that had face was sad, with a beauty that had prematurely faded. But it lighted pleasurably in recognition. Her hair was thick and tawny, lying low over the brow; her eyes were a softly luminous brown and her full lips sensitive and yielding. Lanstron, an intimate of the Galland household, knew her story well and the part that Marta her story well and the part that Marta had played in it.

Some four years previously, when a baby was in prospect for Minna, who wore no wedding ring, Mrs. Galland had been inclined to send the maid to had been inclined to send the maid to an institution, "where they will take good care of her, my dear. That's what such institutions are for, it is quite ecandalous for her and for us—never happened in our family before!"

Marta arched her eyebrows.

"We don't know!" she exclaimed softly.

"How can you think such a thing, let alone saying it—you. a Gallandt."

let alone saying it—you, a Galland! her mother gasped in Indignation.

"That is, if we go far back," said Marta. "At all events, we have no precedent, so let's establish one by keeping her."

"But for her own sake! She will "But for her own sake! She will have to live with her shame!" Mrs. Galland objected. "Let her begin afresh in the city. We shall give her a good recommendation, for she is really an excellent servant. Yes, she will readily find a place among strangers."
"Still, she doesn't want to go, and it would be cruel to send her away."
"Cruel! Why, Marta, do you think I would be cruel? Oh, very well, then we will let her stay!"

the pocket which concealed his hand gave a nervous twitch as if it held something alive and distinct from his own being. "The trial wears on you! Do you want to go?"
"No!" Feller shot back irritably. "No!" Feller shot back irritably. "No!" he repeated resolutely. "I don't want to go! I mean to be game—!—" He shifted his gaze from the bush which he still pretended to examine and suddenly broke off with: "Miss Galland is comins!"

"Both are away at church. Mrs. Galland ought to be here any minute, but Miss Galland will be later because of her children's class," said Minna. "Will you wait on the veranda?"

He was saying that he would stroll in the garden when childish footsteps were heard in the hall, and after a curly head had nestled against the mother's skirts its owner, reminded of the importance of manners in the

His look pleaded for patience, while he tried to smile, which was rather difficult in face of her attitude.
"Not altogether in the garden; partly in the tower," he replied. "You are to be in the whole secret and in such as way as to make my temptation clear, I hope. First, I think you ought to see the setting. Let us go in."
Impelled by a curiosity that Lanstron's manner accentuated, she entered the room. Apparently Lanstron was familiar with the premise. Passing through the sitting-room into the room adjoining, where Feller stored his tools, he opened a door that gave on to the circular stone steps leading down into the dungeon tunnel.
"I think we had better have a light,"

"Now!" exclaimed Marta narrowly,
"It-was you, Lanuy, who recommended Feller to ue as a gardener, competent though deaf! I have proved him to be a man of most sensitive hearing.

have been the welcome friend!" she exclaimed. "A spy on what—on my mother, on Minna, on me, on the flowers, as a part of this monstrous game of trickery and lies that you are playfing?"

There was no trace of anger in her tone. It was that of one mortally hurt. Anger would have been easier to bear than the measuring, penetrating wonder that found him guilty of such a horrible part. Those eyes would have confused Partow himself with the steady, welling intensity of their gaze. She did not see how his lett hand was twitching and how he stilled its movement by pressing it against the bench. "You will take Feller with you when you go!" she said, raing."

Lanstron dropped his bead in a kind of shaking throb of his whole body and raised a face white with appeal.

"I've no excuse for such an abuse of bospitality except the obsession of a loathsome work that some man must do and I was set to do. My God, Marta! I cease to be natural and human. I am a machine. CHAPTER VI.

A Crisie Within a Crisis. A Crisis Within a Crisis.
Following the path to the tower leisurely, they had reached the tower.
Feller's door was open. Marta looked into the room, finding in the neat arrangement of its furniture a new significance. He was absent, for it was the dinner hour.
"On my recommendation you took him," Lanstron said.
'Yes, on yours, Lanny, on a friend's! You"—she put a cold emphasis on the

SHORT AND SIMPLE GOOD-BYS

German Farmer's Farewell to Only Son and to His Horse Was That of a Patriot.

of a Patriot.

Going to war in the case of at least one of the belligerents was a very simple thing. And here is the proof of it compactly presented by Fritz Muller: "Gaffer Breitenmoser had one son and one horse. Yesterday they came and took away his son for the war. The good-bys were said at the gate. They were confoundedly short good-bys. Gaffer Breitenmoser wasted no words. He clapped his son on the shoulder. Do your duty, he said—no more. And his son was even a trifle shorter about it. He said nothing at all. He simply looked, at his father. But what a look! And then he swung off at a trot and was gone.

"That was yesterday. Today they came and fetched away Gaffer Breitenmoser's horse—for the war. The parting again was at the gate. And it was confoundedly short. Gaffer Breitenmoser wasted no words. He clapped his horse on the shoulder. "Do your duty," said he—no more. And the horse was a trifle shorter about it still. He merely looked at Gaffer Breitenmoser. And then he swung off at a trot and was gone."— has been decided by a thing that was a trific in itself. No matter what your preparation, you can never remove the element of chance. An hour gained in information about your enemy's plans may turn the tide in your favor. A Chinese pensant spy, because he happened to be intoxicated, was able to give the Japanese warning in time for Kuroki to make full dispositions for receiving the Russian attack in force at the Sha-ho. There are many other incidents of like nature in history. So is is my duty to neglect no possible method, however absund."

By this time he was at the head of the steps. Standing to one side, he offered his hand to assist Marta. But she seemed not to see it. Her aspect was that of downright antagnism.

"However absurd! Yes, it is absurd to think that you can make me a party to any of your plans, for—" She broke off abruptly with staring eyes, as if she had seen an apparition.

Lanstron turned and through the door of the toolroom saw Feller entering the slitting-room. He was not the bent, deferential gardener. His features were bard-set, a fighting rage burning in his eyes, his sinews taut as if about to spring upon an adversary. When he recognized the intruders, he turned limp, his head dropped, hiding his face with his hat brim, and the steadled himself by resting a hand on the table edge.

She had forced him to reveal all about his uncle and the details of his business. While he was at Truxton she had visited Mr. Tresham. Upon him she had worked her spell also. Unconsciously he had produced the check book and followed her directions. Reeves had cashed the checks at fruxton and had disappeared with the moncey.

Letia noticed it, and when he left she whispered softly:

"We shall be alone tomorrow evening—come early."

But something prevented. The following morning Mr. Tresham, Verne's luncie, sent his nephew away on a bush iness mission to a city a day's journey.

Verne wrote a hurried note to Lella explaining the situation. Mrs. Vascour passed out of his mind, but she was rerived temporarily two days later, when to his surprise Verne met colonel Reeves on the street in Truston.

"Heard you was here on business," spoke Reeves familiarly. "Some business of importance likely to keep menere for a week or two. If you are going to make any kind of a prolonged stay, we can find pleasant mutual quarters down at the Ramblers club."

Verne thought not any too much of Reeves, but time was likely to hang heavy on his hands, the colonel was good company and some very pleasy ant days passed.

"My cousin, Mrs. Vassour, is still at the met your uncle at a reception. Fine old gentleman. He was very attentive and courteous toward her."

Picked Up by Chance at Sale of Continental Collection.

An "Old Master" was recently acquired by an English art lover from a continental Collection. That is, in deed, a so rare event, at a time when English owners of precious works tumble over each other in their eagerness to unload their treasures in Fetura for American gold, that Mr. Herbert Cook's capture of the famous Venetian portrait of Caterina Corparo, queen of Cyprus, from the Crespicollection in Milan, cannot fail to cause widespread satisfaction in the tight little island. The picture has been variously attributed to Giorgione, to Titian, to Liclinio, and to other Venetian masters. The best expert opin ion is now divided between the two former attributions, Mr. Poenson having declared in favor of Titian, and Mr. Cook himself of Giorgione, and the care of the fact that the picture is one of twe parents in the home. Through county superintendents of venetian art. It bears on a parapet an inscription of which only the letters "T. V." (Titiano Veccill) can be diletinguished. Until this inscription and be proved a forgery the picture may safely be assumed to be an early work by the great Titian, when he was still under the influence of Giorgione.

Heredity.

The president of the British esocial tion, Prof. William Bateson, declared in his address at Sydney, Australia that Tom Paine's scouting the notion of a "hereditary wise man," or a "hereditary mathematician," was something more than commonly foolish. "We, on the contrary," Professor Bateson said, "would feel it something of a puzzle if two parents, both mathematically gifted, had any children who were not mathematicians." All kinde of qualities, moral and mental, as well as physical, are now traceable from parents to offspring by the law of inheritance of "factors" which Mendel discovered. Professor Bateson notes with dismay the tendency of civilized man to preserve all his offspring, good and bad, since the proportion of defectives is thus made to increase. He says:

"The increase is so considerable that outside every great city there is a smaller town inhabited by defectives and those who wait on them. Round Londón we have a ring of such towns, with some 30,000 inhabitants, of whom about 28,000 are defectives. Itargly, though, of course, by no means entirely, bred from previous generations of defectives.

Strange Shells of China.

The priests of China, who are smong the cleverest men in the world at many things, often manage to lesert tiny images of Buddha within the shells of living oysters, which are left undisturbed for a year afterward.

At the end of this time the images are covered with mother-of-pearl to such an extent that they appear to have grown naturally in this manner.

The Chinese people hold these shells in the greatest reverence believing that Buddha dwells therein. Should a Christian chance to look upon one, however, the Chinaman will carelessity toes the little image away, believing that the charm has departed forever by reason of the white man's profaning gaze.

Contraction of Sun.

Adopting the well-known hypothesis of Helmholts, which attributes the production of the heat emitted by the sun to its contraction, an idea can be formed of the sun's duration.

If one gives to the sun a coefficient of expansion intermediate between that of mercury and that of gas one arrives at the conclusion that it has taken 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 of years for the sun to contract to its present
