They're Serving You!

Young women in the smartest clothes of the day—the uniforms of Uncle Sam's Armed Services—are doing the biggest job of their lives, helping in hundreds of different ways to win this war more quickly. WACS or WAVES, MARINES or SPARS, ARMY or NAVY NURSES, they deserve the praise of a thankful Nation. Here's to the ladies in uniform!

Greyhound is Serving Them

Greyhound, reaching more of America's military centers, great cities and crossroads communities than any other transportation system, carries thousands of women in uniform—on duty and on leave or furlough. We're proud to serve them.

Dave Nichol
 Soviet Union as resident correspondents. He also expressed the hope that eventually Americans and Russians would find a way to bridge the gulf that separates the two nations from a mutual understanding which a free exchange of news would help to bring about.

News Sources Limited
 "Foreign correspondents in Russia are not only confronted with a formal wartime censorship, but their sources of information are exceedingly limited, a comparison with the free access that newspapermen have to official sources in U. S., Nichol declared.

"Russia wants to establish some bond with Americans," he said, "just as a considerable section of Americans want a working relationship with the Soviet Union. The thing about which Allied newspapermen have never been able to persuade the Russians is that no amount of high politics can ever replace a broad, basic understanding, such as would come about with a free exchange of news under a free press."

"Dave Nichol, who has seen the Russians bounce back after reeling under the heavy blows of the German military machine, has a sympathetic understanding of the Soviet point of view, but he cannot reconcile their control methods with free press in Anglo-American countries. He admits that the Russians have a case for their rigid controls over foreign correspondents, in the light of their own controlled press at home.

"They argue that they can't justifiably give the foreign press for any one of a variety of reasons, what they do not make public to their own people," he explained. "What they don't admit is that Americans are interested in knowing more about the Russian people—what they have done, what they look like and how they think—they just can't understand the American press demand for data about human beings."

"There is no press relations department in the Russian government, Nichol stated. The only agency that approaches such a function is the press department of the Foreign Office, familiarly known as Narkomindal. Anything a correspondent wants—if it is only permission to travel more than 60 miles outside of Moscow—must be cleared through the Foreign Office. Such favors, however, are usually not granted at all—aside from periodic supervised trips to the front."

"Correspondents can see Soviet artists, writers and theatrical representatives, but they cannot get near to the people of the government for interviews, or comments, the Daily News writer explained. Consequently, correspondents are virtually limited to the Russian newspapers for source material. These papers include the party organ, Pravda; the government paper, Izvestia; and the army journal, Red Star. All are completely controlled by the Soviet government.

"After you are there for a time, you learn to attach importance to something in the Russian papers which seems somewhat casual, insofar as the prominence given to it," he added. "You can often relate some casual item to something of a similar nature which has appeared before and thereby discover a significant trend or an important change in government policy."

Escorted Trips Helpful
 "The best things that come out of the Soviet Union are the result of the occasional trips the correspondents are permitted to make to the front. Every one of those trips reveal that Russians are human beings—they bleed, get hungry, and are fascinated with little luxuries.

"Russians are anything but a race of automatons. They are warm and sympathetic persons who are greatly interested in America and Americans. Little information about the United States is contained in the Soviet press. Russian contacts with Americans are confined largely to direct relations, such as with our engineers, or others who go to Russia to aid them in their industrial development."

"He told Editor & Publisher there are 35 American and British correspondents in the Anglo-American Correspondents' Association, of which Eddie Gilmora of the Associated Press is president. Japanese newsmen are not

Council Chooses Cheering Squad
 Peggy Hart, one of the two cheerleaders remaining from last year's squad, announced that a council made up of teachers and each class chose as new cheerleaders Lorraine Nichol, Jack Huebler, Wanda Hunt, and Mary Lou Rowe from a group of sixteen applicants. Also chosen were four auxiliary cheerleaders who will take turns at games, Beverly Bovee, Phyllis Christenson, Margery Bassett, and Geraldine West. This new squad plus Peggy Hart and Merle Parsons had their first workout at a pep meeting at noon on October 13.
