Concert Series to Feature Artists

Music enthusiasts have been invited by members of Northville's Business and Professional Women's club to join their newly sponsored Community Concerts association. The group expects to present a series of three concerts each season by nationally known artists. They will take place in the Wayne County Training school. According to reports, there is a limited number of memberships, inasmuch as the seating capacity of the auditorium is 650. The association is organized on a membership basis, with members paying annual dues which entitle each to attend all of the concerts presented during the season, without additional expense. It will be run on a non-profit, non-loss basis. A membership fee of six dollars will be charged each season, and each dollar paid into the association is spent for artists and attractions, and the expenses incident to the presentation of the concert. The membership drive will be staged next week, and during the week, anyone wanting to attend the concerts should take out their membership. At the close of the campaign, the membership list will be closed and no one may join for another year. Further information may be obtained from Mrs. A. C. Carlson, president of the Northville club. She may be reached in the Carlson Health Studio in the Professional building.

Silver Wedding Feted Sunday

At an open house for 100 guests Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Reamer celebrated their silver wedding anniversary. Friends were present from Detroit, Northville, Fenton, Brooklyn and other nearby cities. Mr. and Mrs. Reamer's cake was trimmed in pink, silver, and blue, and was topped by the bride and groom used on their daughter Shirley's wedding cake. The table was decorated with asters and snapdragons. Mrs. Leroy Jewell and Mrs. Emma Schaufele served at the gathering. The Reamers' maid of honor, best man, and flower girl, Mrs. John Schiller, Manfred Becker, and Mrs. Don Potter, joined them for the celebration. There is no policy like politeness, since a good manner often succeeds where the best tongue has failed. —Elias L. Magoon

THIS WEEK IN Washington

LEADERS of farm organizations here are admittedly worried over the fight that is shaping up over the farm price support program in the 81st congress. It is more and more apparent that some sources whose door steps are not clean are themselves adding to the clamor to place the blame for inflation and particularly high food prices on farmers and the farm price support plan.

It is apparent that this controversy will come to a head in the first few days of congress next January and that in the meantime the importance of the subsidy program will be fanned all out of proportion to its actual place in the inflationary spiral by the presidential and senatorial campaigns this fall. That the high cost of living will be a major issue with both parties blaming the other is a settled fact, and the consumers will continually hear that their grocery bills are high because of the high prices farmers are getting, all because of the price support.

There is, of course, a grain of truth in the charge, and defending the program will be a difficult one according to economic experts here. As a matter of fact, in the leading farm organizations there are only a few ardent supporters of the farm subsidy program.

What they will not tell the people, however, according to these observers, is that with large surpluses of major crops expected, if farm prices should collapse, and they certainly would if it were not for the parity program, then the price of everything else would collapse and the farmer and everyone else would be back where he started to rebuild his depleted acreage and farm plant in the 1930s.

What the consumer is not told, according to the economists, is that the farmer is the greatest purchaser in the nation's economy. It is generally the rule to compare the farmer with an income of $3,000 a year to the worker who makes $3,000 a year. But when the worker spends his $3,000 for what he must buy to live he is through, while the farmer who makes $3,000 a year must spend something like $9,000 a year to make his $3,000 and he spends it in buying in every available market.

What the consumer also does not take into consideration is that while industry and business largely control both production and his market and also has its subsidies in the way of tariffs and other emoluments, while the worker has a floor under his wages and a contract even at a given wage, the farmer has no contract and has no control of either production or market. His only backer is his government which says that when the price of his product gets down below a living wage the government will either lend him money or take it off his hands at a parity price.

When the farmer plants his seed after spending thousands of dollars in preparing his land and fertilizing it, he does not know whether he will raise a spear of wheat or a stalk of corn . . . he faces drought, flood, pests, winds, cyclones, hail. When the businessman sees a product won't sell, he simply doesn't buy any more whereas if the price of wheat or corn fell below a profit to the farmer, he couldn't say, "I won't plant any wheat." If he did we'd all starve.

But the facts are the farmer is being made the stepchild in the inflation fight merely because the government, with tax money it is true, guarantees him a living wage.

Farm leaders and economists point out that the present price support system was developed during the war when every pound of food we could raise was essential to the winning of the war. Farmers were asked to produce to the limit and they did so. Price supports were set to encourage them. To protect them against sudden price breaks when the war ended the price support was extended to cover two full crop years after hostilities ceased. In those two years the farmers were supposed to readjust production to a peace-time pattern. But they have never had a chance to make this new readjustment, for when the war was over the government asked them to continue their all-out production to help feed and clothe a world pauperized and torn by the war.

President Truman is even being urged to call a special session in November or December to take action on giving the farmers flexible price supports on basic commodities instead of the 90 per cent as under the present law.

Scenic Traverse Area Draws Travellers

Drying nets around Leland, in the Grand Traverse area, provides the cameraman with picturesque touches usually associated more with New England or the Gaspe Peninsula.

by the Old AAA Traveler

Grand Traverse Calls Vacationers

You may sing the praises of the towering mountains and of the wave-battered Atlantic coastline up New England way, but for unadulterated beauty and a peaceful calm beyond description I give you the Grand Traverse section of Michigan.

Little wonder the Indians loved it long before the white man came in, for it's a land of blue waters and green forests, fine fishing and a balsam-perfumed air to bring the sleep of a babe; it's a paradise for the vacationist fleeing the rumble of modern traffic and the hurly-burly of modern business life. I've stood high above Traverse City in "La Colina," Ford Cary's magnificent Spanish-type hacienda, and marvelled at the great panorama spread out before my eyes, when in "La Colina" I've sensed I'm in one of the country's "musts" of the section, for high on this hill, Ford Cary, one of the famous artist-photographers, has his kennels, Siberian huskies and his studios where he perpetuates the country's great dogs via his pictures.

But "La Colina" is just one facet of this many-faceted jewel which attracts hundreds of thousands of beauty-loving Americans from the 48 states. Travel in any direction from Traverse City, which probably will be your base, and you'll find enthralling things and places.

And I reckon my evaluation of that great section of the state isn't anything very original-for the Indians way back in the years before the white man came in, had named the great Peninsula Leelanau, which meant "Land of Delight." Truly a suitable designation for that brilliant living kaleidoscope of forests and lakes, majestic sand dunes and miles of orchards, snowy beaches and winding trails, white-winged sailing craft and leaping game fish.

The French voyageurs, cruising out of Mackinac many, many moons before the motor car was thought about, found two deep indentations in the western shores of the mainland that now is Michigan. They called the smaller one "La Petite Traverse", or "little crossing", and the larger they called "La Grande Traverse", or "great crossing", and it is from that larger bay that the entire section of Traverse county . . . Leelanau . . . Antrim and Benzie . . . gets its name.

Yes, my friends, when you see the Grand Traverse region you have seen one of nature's masterpieces. Certainly the old girl was in an expansive mood when she wielded her brushes in cre-which to forget the clatter of urban life. Indian ceremonials for those who like the unusual.

Or, putting it differently, just sort of mentally list those things you'd like for what YOU would consider the ideal vacation . . . and it's a 50-to-1 shot that you'll find every one of those things in the Grand Traverse region.

You'll not miss the thrill of driving over great Sleeping Bear Dune in the big-tired motor cars provided for that purpose. Then there's Peshawbetown, the Indian settlement out Sutton's bay way, where you'll find Chipewas and Ottawas doing the most magnificent of basketry and beadwork, the men turning out bows, and the thrilling picturesqueness that you see wherever you find those original Americans.

It matters not when you see that land of beauty, my friends, for you'll get a huge thrill . . . just as I did . . . when the trees are breaking into tender green . . . or when the orchards are a living blanket of white and pink and red . . . in the summer, when the lakes are lapis lazuli set in emerald . . . or in the fall, when the gnomes with their fairy palettes have transformed the entire area into a breathtaking wonderland of yellow and red and brown and molten gold . . . a vista so lovely you can never forget it.

So . . . Michigan's "Land of Delight" invites you.
